Turkey Fattening.

At this season of the year the subject of fattening is of greatest importance. Many of the birds brought to market are very poor, and a little attention to this matter for a few weeks will increase the profits of the farmer and the pleasure of the consumer.

It is only when the cold comes, and turkeys are about six months old, that they should be fed with better and more pleasant food, in order to increase their size and plumpness for market. Indian co:n, ground barley, wheat, also rice and other articles used to fatten comison fowls, are considered best for turkeys .-Their weight, when well fattened and carried to market, should average twelve pounds; their living and dead weight is as eighteen to twelve pounds.

twelve pounds. Cobbett says, "As to fattening turkeys, the best way is never to let them get poor.— Barley meal mixed with skimmed milk and given to them fresh, will make them fat in a short time. Boiled potatoes mixed with Indian meal will furnish a change of sweet food which they relish much, and of which they should be allowed to act as much as they can. As with Mops and Washboards, and all other Kinds of house-keep-ing implements. In the HARDWARE line, Brass, Brittania, Jappaned and Plain Tin Ware, single or in setts. Bar, Band, Scroll and Hoop Iron. Steel of all kinds, Nail Rods, &c. they relish much, and of which they should be allowed to eat as much as they can. As with others, the food of this bird must be kept clean and the utmost care taken not to give them on the morrow the mixture of the preceding day; because if the weather is warm, it will sour, which might displease them. Much has been published of late in our agricultural journals in relation to the alimen-tary properties of charcoal. It has been re-peatidly asserted that domestic fowls may be fattened on it without any other food, and that too, in a shorter time than on the most nutri-tive grains. "I have recently made an exper-ment," says a writer for a Philadelphia paper, " and been rather skeptical. Four turkeys were confined in a pen and fed on meal, boiled potatoes and oats. Four others, of the same trood, were also at the same time confin-ed in another pen and fed on the same articles, but with one pint of very finely pulverized charbut with one pint of very finely pulverized charcoal mixed with their food-mixed meal and boiled potatoes. They had also a plentiful supply-of broken charcoal in their pen. The eight were killed on the same day, and there was a difference of one and a half pour ds each in favor of the fowls which had been supplied with the charcoal, they being much the fattest and the meat greatly superior in point of ten-derness and flavor."-Rural New Yorker.

KEEPING CABBAGES IN WINTER .- TO preserve cabbages through Winter and still have them accessible at all times, select a perfectly dry spot, and open a trench with the spade or plow. Take up the cabbages with their roots attached, inverting them as you proceed to allow the water to run out from the heads. After pulling a quantity and standing them on their heads until they are thoroughly dry, set them out thickly in the trench, in their natural position, covering with earth nearly to the head. Open another trench as near as the heads will admit of, and set out a second row. Proceed in this manner until all are used, when a temporary board shed may be erected over the patch, four feet high in front, and sloping to near the ground in the rear. This should be sufficiently tight to carry off all the water, but the ends may be left open for ventilation, closing with straw only in very cold weather. Cabbages will keep in this situation until Spring. If water is prevented from entering the heads, the freezing will have no injurious effect. When wanted for use cut off the heads,

A NEW and singularly successful remedy for the cure of all Billious diseases—Costiveness, Indigestion Jaundice, Dropsy, Rheumatism, Fevers Gout, Humors, Nervoases, Irritability, Inflamations, Headache, Pains in the Breast, Side, Back, and Limbs, Female Complaints, and if frozen soak in well or spring water for a few hours before cooking. This will take out the frost gradually, and also remove any disagreeable flavor. Another and very common method is, to stand them upon the level ground with the stand them upon the level ground, with the roots up, and turn a furrow against the row upon either side. An additional covering is given by banking up the earth about them with a spade, until the heads are entirely buri-ed. They keep well in this manner when the ground is frozen hard. Another plan which we have pursued with success, is as follows :--Transplant the cab-bages into close single rows, say 12 feet long Among the eminent gentlemen who have testified in
