Farmer Williams' Tool House.

A FARMER'S RAWELE AMONG HIS NEIGHBORS.

One day, early this season, I strolled over to Neighbor Williams', for, as you already know, I like to be friendly to all, and we are a pretty social class over here. I did not wait for a "rainy day" this time, as I had a few important topics about Summer crops, &c., to talk with friend W. about. But I found him too much occupied to chat any. He was in a great hurry to begin his plowing, for the ground was in nice order. The horses and oxen were waiting to be harnessed, or yoked, and such a hurrying, scolding time I have seldom seen.

" Jim, I say, where is the bolts and clevis ?" "I don't know, sure boss. Not a bit of one could I see at all." "Well, go and look all around, and under the place where the harrow was, and see." The boss was tired of waiting, and went too. In the meantime Tom came up with-" Masther, and there is three teeth out of that same harrow." " Well, Tom, go and get the axe and I will dress out some at the wood pile." After a long hunt, Jim and the boss had found two clevises under the rubbish, but not a bolt. Now what must they do .---" Jim, go over to Neighbor Thomas' and bora couple of bolts ; he has plenty, for I saw a number in his tool box." By this time Tom returned, with-" Masther, and it was verself that left the axe up in the woods, for I couldn't find it all." Here was a dilemma for my easy careless friend ; but as the harrow had stood against the fence, exposed to weather all the t me, and in poor condition ; the teams must wait for Tom to go half a mile for the axe the loss had forgotten to bring home. Jim came back with the borrowed articles and begun to harness his team ; but lo ! one of the traces had ripped, and Jim had to take his shoe string to tie it up with, and the whiffle-trees were out of order. Here commenced a hunt for the hammer to mend it, but, as was the case almost invariably, the one that used it last just laid it down in some out of the way place, and a search had to be made every time it was wanted. But it will be too tedious to relate all the mishaps of that busy day-how the pin (wooden of course) of the oxbow was lost, and the chain was found where they drew the last logs out of the woods, &c., &c. After two hours waiting, the teams finally moved off to their allotted work, but the plows were so rusty from exposure that they would scarcely turn the soil, and the harness was constantly giving out. I could not see that there was a place for any tool on the farm, -- for hoes, shoyels, forks, rakes, harness and everything, was lying about in the corners, or on the ground as the case might be. The truth is Neighbor Williams Tool House is as large as " all out of doors."

The teams being out of the way, until something should break, which I predicted soon would be the case, Neighbor showed me a whole lot of seeds he had recently purchased. He said he meant to try everything this year that was new, for he missed it last year in not buying a good stock of Chinese sugar-cane .-And sure enough he had a lot of them. There were different kinds of corn, several of eats, some nuts resembling the grass nuts that grow in South Carolina, which he called earth almonds, the Japan pea, &c. He was very confident all of them would be aspeculation, even if

WHEN TO FATTEN SWINE .- Most farmers delay this business quite too long. It is a well ascertained fact that fat and flesh are laid on much more easily in warm than in cold weather. No food is wasted now in keeping up the heat of the animal system. The porkers should not be allowed to run in the road or the pasture after the heat of the summer is past. If and ear. There are the beets and the cabbage leaves, the unused summer squashes and to-matoes, that will rot unless transferred to the feeding trough. These fresh articles mixed with the corn-meal diet, promote the thrift of the animals and keep up good digestion. In the winter this kind of diet is scarce, and the uniform corn and meal soon statia their appe-tites and they do not gain as much in flesh. When the process of fattening is begun, the pigs should have all the feed they will eat up clean, until they are ready for the knife. A spealing pig is a cry that should never be heard about the farmer's premises. It will not pay. SAVE YOUR OWN GRASS SEED.—Many far-mers neglect to save their own grass seeds, because it needs attention at a time when they the act how for the state operation of the stonach, bow-there are then with the mean they is a more powerful an-the result of the stonach betwice the stonach bear. But I fear he will be unsuccessful, for he is such a man for new things, and loyes so well to attend at doings, especially agricultural Fairs in the country, he will pay but little attention to them after they are planted. He loves to take prizes at the fairs, and many a one he got, too, as I found by the books and enps he exhibited to the view of every one that enter-ed his house. He always took a nice colt, calf, pig, or even a hill of corn, and gave it all the attention and labor he could to push it ahead and neglect all the rest. Yet he was a far more noted man in the county than his thrifty pains-taking, n eighbor Thomas. A few days after this I met Thomas, and, I asked him if he was not disposed to go largely
