A Talk on Orderly Farming.

There is so much disorderly farming in vogue, we have thought we might do a useful service in drawing a picture of the opposite; we mean a style of husbandry which has a place and time for everything, and does everything in its place and time ; which seeks, in short, to carry on all the operations of the farm in the best possible manner. It cannot be denied that very many farmers lack the quality to which we here allude. They plow and manure, and rotate crops; they buy, raise and sell stock, and manage their house hold affairs very much at hap-hazard, with little forethought and method. We are well aware that it is hard to resist the power of bad example ; that it is casy to do as our fathers did before us, and as our neighbors do around ; that unforseen circumstances will arise to break in upon the best matured system; we admit all this, yet we know that it is best to reduce our style of farming to a well digested plan, and to strive by all means to make circumstances bend to that plan. By firm resolution and energy, more can be done in this matter than is often any possed. There is meaning in the old many factors and plain Tin Ware, single or in setts, Bar, Band, Scroll and Hoop Iron, Steel of all kinds, Nail Rods, &c. Pumps, Lead Pipe and all the necessary fixtures for water works. Patent, Stretched Leather Belting and String Leather, and 10,000 other articles too numerous to mention, that we are now receiving direct from the hands of manufacturers and importers, including the largest assortment and greatest variety of best matured system; we admit all this, yet supposed. There is meaning in the old proverbs that " Fortune favors the brave," and that "The lucky man is generally the energetic and industrious man." But now to the picture : HEALTH. - The orderly farmer takes care of his health. He does not expose himself unnecessarily to wet and cold; does not go with damp feet and insufficient clothing; does not overwork himself in planting time, and in having and harvesting; does not worry himself with undue anxiety about the weather, or the success of crops, and so expose himself to the assaults of disease. He keeps his head cool, his heart cheerful, his passions under control and so builds up and fortifies his citadel of strength that he is seldom interrupted in his daily labors.

Buildings .- Look now at his buildings .-His dwelling house is not, indeed, pretentions that would be out of keeping with the character of the man, and of his employment; but it is comfortable, convenient, neat It is roomy like his heart. It is a good protection against all the vicissitudes of the seasons. What a spacious cellar! How well arranged for storing all kinds of fruit and vegetables, and the various other articles needful in good housekeeping And then, it is frost-proof and rat-proof, and is kept as "neat as a pin."-The rooms above ground are planned for convenience in dispatching household duties.— The parlor and living room look attractive kitchen, pantries, closets, milk-room, woodhouse, well-house, cistern, sinks and drains, are all just where they should be, or as near to that as possible. His barn and other outbuildings have no ginger-bread work about them, but they are substantial, suited to their purpose, and are kept in repair.

Fences .- Glance at his fences. Some of them are the old Virginia rail, but they are not suffered to become tipsy; some of them are post and board, and here and there hedges are beginning to appear. He is not yet per-fectly satisfied with his hedge-plant for a permanent farm fence. The buckthorn is hardly thorny enough to turn cattle; the hawthorn is liable to several diseases; the locust is ram-pant, and needs considerable care, but answers tolerably well. The osage orange is just the thing, if it proves hardy enough for his climate. He is giving it a thorough trial. But whatever kind of fence he may have for any field, he does not suffer it to become dilapidated.— Good fences, ne knows, have much to do in making good neighbors; he values his own prim peace of mind too highly-saying nothing about his crops-to leave his field exposed to the inroads of vicious cattle. Broken rails are therefore, replaced with new ones, and if a board gets off, it is soon observed and nailed on

Mode of Tillage .- Notice his mode of tillage. As a ground work of the whole, he has drained his low, swampy lands, and not those only, but other parts of his farm which were found to have super-abundant moisture at any season of the year. He was systematic even, in doing this. It would have cost too much labor and money to undertake all this at once. So he distributed the work through several years, and the remainder as the time and means permitted. And the work pays as it goes .-Thorough plowing and manuring go hand in hand with draining. The skinning system he leaves for others: his plows are of the kind which go down into the soil, not merely scratch the surface. No manures are wasted on his premises; they are never so highly concentrated as to need dilution by exposure to rain, sun and wind. If anything of this sort is needed. he thinks it is best to incorporate with them muck or straw, and to lay them up in heaps under sheds or barn-cellars. Nor does he confine his work to a single season. The wellprepared field is sown or planted with good seed, and then it is well tilled throughout the Summer. The cultivator and hoe are kept bright, the soil kept mellow, the crops always growing, and the weeds kept in constant sub-IMPLEMENTS, SEEDS AND STOCK .- His selec tion of these is worthy of notice. He likes not to make farming an unnecessary drudgery Hence, whenever he can find a machine that will economically save human labor, he buys it at once. He takes pains to inform himself as to the best patterns that he may not be imposed upon by unprincipled venders. So in the choice of seeds. He is careful to save his own crops of these which mature the earliest for children.) All work w Towarda, Dec. 8, 1857. and develop themselves in the best manner .being too long grown on the same soil, he exchanges with orderly farmers in other places. If he learns of new varieties which promise well, he does not scout them at once as humbugs. He goes to reliable sources of information, or he makes careful experiments, and ed to order then adopts or rejects the new comer, as its merits seem to require. He is not afraid to prove new things, yet it is quite sure to hold to the old which are known to be good. The same system is shown in his purchases and care of stock. He is not ignorant of the respective merits of imported breeds, but what ever the for. They are well housed, supplied with food and water in abundance, and at regular hours.

The flatters himself that from his lang experience in business he will be able to please all who may favor him with their custom. Owing to the low pressure in the money for sour looks and not very sweet words, " blood of his animals," they are well cared touching the accident of life, was observed to become very amiable. "What happy change has come over you?" said a neighbor. "Why," has come over you ?" said a neighbor. said the transformed, " to tell you the truth, Block. said the transformed, "to tell you the truth, I have been all my life striving for a contented mind, and have finally concluded to six down contented without it."
