Make a Map of the Farm.

Few of our farms are in a finished state Most of them are more in the raw state than na ture left them, and have to be recovered from the consequences of the bad management of their former occupants. They are yet chaotic, and it will take more than six days of labor, to round them into form, to separate land from water, and to turn the waste into fruitful field. They are to be made as much as the house that has only its frame-work reared, or the ship that stands on the stocks, with unplanted ribs and beams. Many are waking up this un finished state of their farms, and have already begun certain improvements, and have planned certain others, which bide their time.

But the improvement of a particular field is too often undertaken without any reference to the rest of the farm, and a great deal of labor is needlessly expeuded. We have seen one field drained, and its water carried off on to the adjacent field only to make it more wet and valueless than ever. The only way in which farm improvements may be managed with economy, is to regard the farm as a whole, and to make every improvement with reference. and to make every improvement with reference to a system which shall embrace the whole A house to suit the occupant, can be built much cheaper at the outset, than to modify the plan and make successive additions, in so many successive years. The architect finds a plan indispensible to do his work. The whole work is projected from cellar to garret, the size of every room and its estimated cost put down. The ship builder does not touch a stick of timber, until he has his model completed, and the length and size of every timber in the vessel estimated.

The farm, as it ought to be, is simply a machine for the production of crops, as the ship is a machine for navigating the water. It has to be made out of the materials which nature furnishes, all requiring more or less modification, to adapt them to the purposes of product.

He is the owner of, say three hundred acres of land, embracing the usual variety of forest, swamp, pasture and tillage. Some of it is light saudy land, some beavy clay, and another portion is so rocky, that it has never been plowed. The forest of fifty acres, he wishes to retain for fuel forest of fifty acres, he wishes to retain for fuel and timber, so that that may be regarded as a fixture. He has determined upon a rotation of crops embracing a six years course. He therefore needs but six large fields to carry on &c., he has 240 to be cut up into six lots of forty acres each. This is his plan. H's farm,

Large sizes up to 60 inch, always on hand and sold at Factory Prices. Particular attention paid to orders by as it lies now, is divided into twenty lots, or mail. more, has rocks to be removed, brush pastures to be cleared up, and swamps to drain. This cannot all be done in one year, but in six years, he can do it, and make it pay. So he draws his map of the farm as it is, and determines to begin his improvements upon the lower side, where there is a good outlet for all the water that he wishes to drain off. He finds upon this side of the farm, four or five fiel's to be thrown into one; and a swale of three acres with a hard clay subsoil, that must be furnished with tile; and several gravelly known in the control of the contr er side, where there is a good outlet for all the furnished with tile; and several gravelly knolls ano and Mclodeon; MISS CLARISSA A. STOCKWELL, Teacher of French

With a map before him, the farmer can project all these improvements, as he sits by the Winter fire. He can calculate very accurately how many rods of new fence will need to be made, how many rods of ditch must be dug, and how many tiles he must order, and about what will be the cost of the overation.

His whole pathway of improvement will be clear and luminous, and he will not become discouraged. and leave a thing half done, like a man who is feeling his way in the dark. The assurance that he is on the path of improvement is worth everything to the farmer. There is no good reason why he should not pursue his purposes with as much cheerfulness, and confidence of success, as the house or the ship-builder. Let him map his farm, and go forward into the execution of a plan, resolutely, and patiently, and in due time, he will have a machine for producing crops, admirably adapted to his wants, and to his market .- American Agriculturist.

CARROTS FOR STOCK .- Can anything be better as Winter food for all kinds of animals, than this familiar root? We have used it for several years with most gratifying results .-It is not only useful as a " relish" with other fodder, as apples and vegetables are for mankind in the Winter, but it contains valuable nourishing properties, and may be used as an alternate substitute for other food. We are not surprised to learn that the keepers of livery stables in cities are beginning to use carrots for horse food. They hold that a peck of carrots and a peck of oats are better for a horse than two pecks of oats. All animals re quire for their health and comfort green food to mix with their dry fodder, and their Winter bill of fare is defficient, if it does not inclade carrots.

We have the report of an experiment made by a careful farmer to test the relative value of several kinds of food for milch cows with the following result: three pounds of carrots equal to one pound of hay. This would make three tons of carrots equal to one ton of hay -i. e., for producing milk; but for fattening puposes, we should place the carrot near upon a par with hay. This also is true of it, that it yields larger crops than the potatoe, is mo: e nutritions, is better adapted to this climate than ruta-baga or turnips, can be more readily and better kept through the Winter, and is more easily prepared for feeding, as it does not require boiling or steaming, unless it be for swine. We sometimes meet in our exchanges, with various receipts for coloring Wintermade butter : but we believe the best way to accomplish this is by feeding the cows on good orange carrots, and leave to them the work of coloring the butter.

The culture is not too difficult.
