farmer's Department.

About Beans.

The importance of beans as a farm crop, w assume as granted : we now wish simply to notice one objection sometimes made to their cultivation, viz : that they exhaust the soil Science declares that they impoverish land more than corn or grain crops. Here are just the words : " A product of 30 bushels of beans per acre will remove, say 490 pounds of uitrogen or flesh-forming substance, while the same quantity of wheat per acre will remove only 260 pounds ; of barley, 40 bushels will remove 280 pounds ; of oats the same quantity will take away 275 pounds." And then the straw of the wheat must carry off its proportion of the same element.

Why, then, it may be asked, should farmers cultivate this hurtful plant ? For the same reason that they cultivate corn, or tobacco, or hops, or any other very exhausting crop ; it may make large draughts on the soil and require heavy manuring to restore them, but then it pays well. Nor is this all : When properly cultivated, we seriously doubt whether it injures the land so much as has been supposed. Look at its large leaves ; don't they show that the plant is designed to draw much of its nourishment from the atmosphere ? In this respect, it is like clover, and unlike wheat and oats with small leaves. And then, many of those leaves fall and decay upon the ground, thus adding to its richuess.

Look, too, at the long tap-root of the bean. It does not ramify all through the surface soil, as do the corn roots : it pierces down into the sub-soil, and then sends out its spongioles at the bottom. It goes deeper in proportion to the thoroughness with which the soil is tilled. And this is just what we affirmed : with deep cultivation is it doubtful whether this crop is so exhausting as is sometimes supposed.

SELECTING CORN FOR SEED .- Those who have neglected to select their seed corn from among the earliest ears, on stalks bearing two or more ears, have lost a fine opportunity for improv ing the productiveness and the early ripening of future crops of this important cereal. But they may still do better than have to go, as many yet do, to the crib to obtain their supply of seed. They may save themselves also from the disappointment, and the loss of time and patience incident to planting seed which was never fully ripened, or was put away before being sufficiently dried, and which had lost its germinating power by freezing or becoming mouldy in consequence of the remaining moisture. These evils may yet be avoided by selecting the best ears at time of husking, saving the husks upon the ears, or a portion of them, wherewith to braid several together and to hang them upon poles, nails, or something of the kind. Let the ears be placed in a room, chamber, of loft where they will be sure to dry thoroughly, both cob and corn, and then they cannot aftewards be injured by frost, as much seed corn has been during our late winters.

As corn generally was nearly or quite two weeks, or ten days at least, later than usual in ripening this year, and as consequently some of it was overtaken by frost while yet unripe, or cut up while somewhat green, in order to be beforehand with the frost, there ought to be some caution exercised in obtaining good seed from such lots of corn. If any riper lot is easily accessible, it would be better to go to a neighbor for seed, than to depend on any such late and unripened corn. Those who are content to have their seed from such unripened or late-ripening corn, will probably have to plant over again next spring. such late and unripened corn. Those who have to plant over again next spring.

A careful farmer would also reject all ears for seed, however large, which he might find

TEACHING ANIMALS .- The farmer is the " schoolmaster" of his herd. They are in the habit of doing daily as he allows them to do. They fly at his approach, or welcome him .--They are gentle or not, as he teaches them to They watch his foot, if he is accustomed to kicking them. They kick back if he allows Nothing adds to the market value of farmstock more materially, with so little cost, as the habits which are acquired in youth. The cow -the horse, the ox and the dog are valued much according to their habits or educationso is the man. The horse is frequently carefully trained-so is the dog ; the ox and the cow are as frequently " walloped into duty" as any way.

I cannot see the propriety in offering premiums for well trained speed horses, and not for plow or draught horses, or oxen and well trained cows. In real importance to the farmer the latter are far preferable.

I would wish to urge upon the farmer, and the farmer's sons, the importance of careful, thorough training of farm animals. Use them tenderly and gently at all ages, and you will see them manifest pleasure, rather than fear at your presance. In teaching them to work, or to perform any duty, you need to be thorough, not harsh-kind, not cruel-and your forbearance will gain their labor, and your kindness their love.-Correspondence of the Genesce Farmer.

Colic IN HORSES .- As there have been two or three receipts published in your journal for the cure of the above disease, I beg leave to communicate one, hoping that it may prove useful to as many as may have need to try it. I have tried it frequently, and have never known it to fail, when all other remedies failed to produce any effect.

There are two kinds of colic, one known as spasmodic or cramp colic, the other is termed the gravel colic. The latter is somewhat different in symptoms, and requires different treatment. In the first place the horse does not cramp, but lies more on his back, bringing the region of the kidneys in contact with the ground ; he bites his sides and stretches himself frequently. Any person, by a lit-tle observation, can easily distinguish between the two a marked difference, so as not to mistake one for the other.

For the cramp colic, take two ounces of aloes, one ounce of gamboge, and thirty drops of croton oil, divide into three doses with a pint of warm water to each ; or if the animal is hard to drench, make it into three pills by using linseed oil and flour. Give the two first doses an hour apart ; if this does not produce the desired effect in two hours, thereafter give the third dose in pint of linseed oil, which will be sufficient to remove the most obstinate case --- Valley Farmer.
