The following mode will be found simple, practical and certain, and can be applied to any extent desired. Put the shelled corn in a vessel or vessels of such dimensions as are required for the quantity to be tested. Pour water over it of about the temperature of milk from the cow, until it is fairly covered, adding to the water from time to time, if the absorption and swelling of the corn should raise it above the surface. Set it in a moderately warm place, and let it remain there twenty-four hours .-Then pour the water off, cover the corn with some thick cloth which must be kept wet, and let it stand in a mass, still in a warm place, until it sprouts .- This will take place in from thirty six to forty-eight hours, usually, if the we corn is good.

I prepare all my corn for planting in this manner, though I know the seed to be good.

I plant sometimes with the sprout half an inch

This advantage in the fall is sometimes very important. The damaged corn from my field last year did not exceed five per cent.

Selecting Seed Corn.—Farmers will remember that for two or three years past a great deal of corn came up badly. Last spring, especially, much of it "rotted" in the ground.—The loss from this cause is hundreds of thousands the last senson. On our own ground (with some fourteen acres) the loss was next to (with some fourteen acres) the loss was next to nothing. The same is true of some others we could name. What is the reason of the differ.

Towarda, April 2, 1857. could name. What is the reason of the difference? Why does the seed in one field grow, and in another rot? That is just what we wish to get at.

One great cause of the rotting of seed is that it was never well ripened. Another reason is that it is badly dried. Poorly ripened and badly dried seed is very easily injured by fermentation, and a very little fermentation and moulding will destroy vitality. Last au-tumn we had the best, largest and ripest ears carefully selected, and braided together by the husks in tresses, and hung in a dry place .-This was planted, and notwithstanding the drenching rain and mud, all came up-not a missing hill or stalk—and the field is noted as one of the best in the country. The same has been the experience of some others. Those who made no selection and took no care of their seed, have had "very bad luck." Another field was planted with King Phillip corn, not trussed; but as this ripens so early and perfectly, this operation appears not necessary. It came up as evenly as the other.

Let farmers select their best and ripest ears, and either truss and hang them up, or place them, in the ear, where they will dry thoroughly, (unless it be some very early, quicklyripening sorts,) and there will be better success and better luck with the corn crop .-Country Gentleman.

Serring Out New Orchards—There is no greater truth than this—it is the interest of every one who has a farm or plantation without an orchard, to plant one—it adds to the comforts of home, enhances the value of the place and if properly managed after being the school, and one half at the middle of the place and if properly managed after being the school, and one half at the middle of the term—Fuel and contingencies included:

The ground intended for an orchard, should neither be subjected to being flooded in times of heavy rains, nor naturally wet in times of drought. If not naturally dry, it should be un- bran der-drained. It should be plowed deeply by drench-plowing, to at least 20 inches in depth, besides which it should be liberally manured with natritive manures, ashes, and bone dust, and top-dressed with line; as pot-ash, phosphate of lime, and lime greatly abound in both Those may nature.

REASONS WHY FARMERS ARE HEALTHIER THAN PROFESSIONAL MEN .- These reasons are : 1. They work more, and develop all the leading muscles of the body.

and do not wear themselves out so rapidly in the fierce contest of rivalry.

6. Their pleasures are not simple and less exhausting.

A New Jersey farmer hits off some folks handsomely. He says:

"People say the farmers are the most independent class; and pray why should we not be? We have to work hard enough for what we get. The reason why farmers don't fail we get. The reason why farmers don't fail along with the rest is, because we live within our means. I own a good farm and if I was to live as people do in the cities it would take five farms to keep me and my family."
