rom the Peoria Transcript, May 15.1 wind, Rain and Hail--Destruction of Life and Property.

A fearful hurricane, accompanied by hail rgin, visited this city and vicinity yestercommencing just hefore six o'clock in fternoon and lasting about three quarters an hour. For fifteen minutes previous to commencement the sky was thickly overcast dark green clouds, and the city presensombre and gloomy appearance, which d a foreboding of the terrible catastrophe ed a local and a l ng rooms and other places of business s was lighted, and the crowds of people ried through the streets seeking shelter in the lurid light like so many spectres. reeze came from any quarter; on the not a wave rippled; on the trees not a intered. All nature seemed hushednaught but a gloomy green; in the city an silence. In the midst of this scene id blaze of lightning shot up apparently every quarter of the horizon, and for or four minutes was accompained by no Suddenly, however, the city was by a loud and heavy clap, and instantly cane commenced, sweeping through with terrible power from the west .came the rain in torrents. We never h a deluge of water. In less than three s the hail-stones, as large as hickory commenced beating down like leaden ISAAC MYER.

and the hurricane, meantime, increased htful power. scene was now terrible. Hundreds of nevs in every direction were twisted off. the bricks sent crashing through the s and over on the neighboring roofs; dry goods boxes were picked up and hurby through the air until they struck some immovable object; awnings and were torn from their fastenings violently: hillets of wood, stones, brick--every wable, in short, went flying through ts and over and against buildings ; the wharf, becoming perfectly unle were tossed over the waves to site shore, and to sure destruction. nent the terrible gale seemed to have fury but it was only for a moment. it swept through the city, and this time e sinews of a giant. Church steeples need off, and went crashing through s: exposed frame buildings were fairly m their foundations and crushed into of ruins; roofs were torn up and gs, in process of construction, were over upon the roofs of smaller adjoining While this description of destruc as going on, the large hail stones, falling were driven with great noise and down upon the city, and were doing se damage, People rushed from their and places of business out into the storm of their lives; women fainted, cows wildly and bellowing with pain through reets, and, with the pelting rain and hail, vid flashes of lightning, the terrific claps under, the roar of the hurricane and the of falling chimneys and buildings, the was one of great terror. At one when the gale was at its height, it really ed as if the entire city would be laid in

into fragments, and large brick storm continued, with more or less fury out three-quarters of an hour. The wind ated its violence, the dark clouds in the fted gradually, and a mellow, golden eamed down upon the city, strangely st with the darkness that had only inutes before wrapt it in such gloom ntered out into the street and mixed the anxious frightened crowd. Every were evidences of the destructive power storm. The streets were filled with rubruins were met with on every side. All lows upon the west side of every ough which we passed were more or en. Rumors of rains and accidents in narter were abundant upon every man's and had the city been stormed and ged by an invading army, it would not have in a state of greater terror and confuestorm was as furious out upon the es as it was in this city, and the destruc to both life and property will be immense use standing unprotected upon the prairie resist for a moment such a powerful gale of yesterday. The train of the Peoria taka road was near Cruger station the hurricane swept past. One of the er cars, baggage car and the tender sted bodily from the track and turned nto the ditch. Cruger village, which ated upon the prairie eighteen miles east city, is in complete ruins-every build d to the ground, including the stationke. Washington, a place of some fifteen dinhabitants, located eight miles this Ctuger, was saved from complete desby being situated where it is protecthe woods and hills. It did not escape amage, however.
