farmer's Department.

The Hay Crop. ITS QUALITY THIS YEAR-SALTING HAY-MIXING STRAW WITH HAY.

Our hay cutting this year is late, and from its extraordinary rank growth in the month of June, considerable portions of it may be overgrown, and washy-that is lacking substance and nutritions quality. Grass thus rankly grown should stand longer to fully mature its sap, and fit it for substantial fodder, then when equally grown under fitting alternations of sunshine and rain. Especial care is required to examine that it be thoroughly cured-not dried-before going into mow or stack, as, without such precaution, much that is apparently cured on the outer surface, is still damp and green within.

Many hay cutters have a fancy for salting it as it is thrown into the mow or stack, and the expediency or benefit of thus using salt is still an undecided question with many excellent farmers. We have tried salting, but we confess, with no decided opinion of its advantages. Two or three or even four quarts on a ton appears a small dose to preserve hay too damp to keep otherwise. As to any good to cattle to daily partake of salt with hay, even if so thoroughly distributed through as to affect it alike we have some doubts, believing by long experience that a tablespoonful or so of salt. once a week or fortnight, is all that a full grown ox or cow requires, and that it is, perhaps, better so fed, than if with their daily food.

Those who are putting up hay for their own use, and have old clean straw on hand, if their hay be imperfectly cured, can profitably intermix layers of straw with the hay, when thrown into the mow or stack thus preventing mold. The straw absorbs the superfluous moisture, and it also gets a flavor from the grass, thus making the straw a palatable fodder. We have practiced this with decided advantage, and commend it strongly.
We have also found rank water-grown hay,

We have also found rank water-grown hav, like that of this season, less kindly to cure in the winrow, or cock. as recommended in our last number, than that of ordinary seasons .---Spreading, therefore, that which is hand-mown should be looked after. In such a season as this, particularly, the benefit of the mowing machine, in this regard, is apparent.

SHADE TREES IN PASTURES .- I confess to a very warm love for trees. I love them in the forest, stretching their tall trunks towards heaven ; I love them on the lawn, affording a welcome shade from "Summer's noontide ray," when wearied with toil, I return from the field and I also love noble trees, scattered here and there over the farm, grown in the majestic Factory Prices. Particular attention paid to orders by symmetry of nature in whose refreshing shade our grandsires sat and looked over the scenes of hard-won, but bloodless victories gained over the stubborn soil. Generations of cattle have reposed contentedly in this shade, and what sweeter picture of rural repose can there be than when looking over broad fields, we see the flocks taking refuge from a Summer's sun. under the wide-spreading boughs of some ancient elm, oak, or maple. And vet we are to'd that this is all wrong ; that all those grand old trees which (thanks he to their sense of the beautiful) our fathers left standing when they felled the mighty forest, must all be leveled to the earth leaving but an unsightly stump as a monument of departed glory ; and horse or ox, with no retreat from the burning rays of a Summer's sun, forced to wander in agony over the field, eating, perhaps because he does not know what else to do. I don't wish harm to any one, but I would like to see Hon. Mr. D who was the first to mount this hobby, and out in the sun some July day, when heaven and earth seemed filled with fire and if he did not soon wish for some of those trees he sent bit forward contingents; for instrument on which to take D who was the first to mount this hobby laid his foreman to cut down, I would yield the point. But seriously are we to have no eye for the beautiful ? Is the almighty dollar taste in their arrangement, why not carry out the same plan over all the farm? We often admire the stately proportions of an oak, an elm or a maple at a distance more than close within two miles of the Institute shall be admitted to tuielm, or a maple, at a distance more than close at hand, because we can then take in their whole beauty of proportion at a glance. No farmers ; do not as you see your flocks and herds begin to seek the cooling shade, in the leafy month of Jnne, sa'ly forth, ax in hand, and fell to the earth your beautiful trees. I am one of those who believe, that the stomach of an ox requires rest as well as that of a man and that man might as well cram himself from morning till night, as to required it of his dumb beast. Indeed, when we consider the system of the ox, that be eats quickly, and that a puriod of ranges is absolutely userserve that elm, or a maple, at a distance more than close period of repose is absolutely necessary, that he may chew it over again, the idea of compelling him to stuff himself continually is simply ridiculous. Thus would I say to the graziers, spare the trees.

WHITE DAISIES-The prevalence of white daisies on a farm is generally considered a sign of bad management. But let us not be too fast in our denunciation of this weed, or of the farmers who do not exterminate it. Sheep relish it highly and though horses and cattle tarn away from it while green, they take to it kindly when made into hay Then, there are certain dry, sandy soils, where Timothy and clover grow with difficulty, and suffer in time of drouth, but on which the daisy flourishes well. Now, if the owner of such hand has not the means or the time to enrich it all at once H. A. BURBANK'S BAKERY why should he not make the best of the case. and let the daisy have the largest liberty ?-As to allowing the plants to go to seed, and scatter over the neighboring lands, we give no such advice.

If one desires it, really sets about it, the short, break up the land and devote it to a heavy crop of oats and daisies will almost ing and devote it to meadow, and the luxuriant ing and devote it to meadow, and the luxuriant grass will choke it out. Or, raising any hoed R ESPECTFULLY informs his former customers and crop upon the land will answer the same purpose.

TO KILL FERNS AND BRAKES .- Most varieties can be subdued by mowing them in June and in September, regularly for two or three years. Let no one be disheartened, because there do not second at once.
