Wintering Stock.

Cold winds and the "sere and yellow leaf of nutumn forcibly remind the farmer of the necessity of early forethought, and ample provision for the care of his stock through the coming winter. Upon the economical and su cessful manuer in which this is accomplished depends, quite as much as upon any other thing, his success in stock growing and in farm "The merciful man is merciful to his ling. beast," and will not let the unkindly blast of winter blow all too harshly around its unprotected head.

The farmer's first care for his stock should be a warm shed and stable room for the whole herd. In our opinion, the stable is the most profitable. Stock to do well, must be kept warin, as it is impossible for them to more than live while shivering on the sunny side of the barn, stockyard, or rail fence. Every good farmer understands that a certain amount of animal heat has to be kept up, and this is done by the consumption of hay, straw and grain, as heat is kept up in a store by the combustion of wood or coal. It is not proposed to enter into the chemical changes produced in the case of the food or wood-both are welladmitted truths, -and the question presented to the farmer is, whether his animal or stove will be most easily and economically kept at a proper temperature under a well constructed stable or house, or outside, exposed to the cold winds of our Northern winter.

If you have the stables and sheds all prepared, you will make a note, and begin to look after the stock. You will find it had economy to let them range through meadow, field, orchard and wood, until compelled to come home by the thick falling snow Yon may, it is true, have your stacks and mow untouched-but the cold, frost bitten grass has afforded so little nourishment, that your stock has already lost flesh. Believe me, dear sir, every pound lost now will cost the value of more than double the number to replace after they come to dry food.

Commence early to put cattle in the stalls for the night, and feed them there, in preference to feeding in the yard, or around some stack in a distant geld. Cattle will run over the hay on the ground and waste much of it. Stacking at best is but a poor method, for it will not take much ciphering to show that the waste in saving and feeding out of doors, will soon pay for comfortable barns and feeding stalls. By beginning early to feed at night, the stock may run out days.

Good hay answers every purpose, but there are stalks, oat and wheat straw, which farmers design as a part of the forage for winter use. No one considers bread or meat alone, palatable food for himself or family ; neither should he celculate to heep his herd through win-ter on hay or straw alone. Hay may be fed once a day, and as a change, cut straw with the addition of a little corn or oatmeal, or shorts, would be very advisable. Perhaps hay that is good does not require cutting, but stalks and straw repay cutting many fold. We are satisfied that it would be economy in all respects to have a good straw-cutter, and hire a man, if necessary, to take care of the whole herd, rather than feed coarse fodder whole.

Roots should not be overlooked. To keep cattle in good condition, they are very nutritions, and serve as a change from the dry food in general use. Carrots, turnips and beets, can be so easily and profitably grown, that no good herdsman should dispense with them. They are easily kept and ent, and should be used once a day at least, mixed with cut straw or stalks, or by themselves. It would be just as stalks, or by themselves. It would be just as tial to a good appetite, and it is unquestionably true, that roots will have the effect of making cattle more healthy, just as fresh food and vegetables are better for those who go down to the sea in great ships. Many of the wasting and fatal diseases which diminish the herd in spring, in our opinion, might be prevented by a judicious use of roots and grain in the winter.

Water should not be forgotten when providing for stock. It is not enough, that there is a brook in yonder hollow, near half a mile from the barn, for cattle can hardly afford to go so far in wet and muddy weather, and in the deep snow of mid-winter, they will suffer for want of water before they will expose themselves to the drifts and cold bleak winds The water should be in the yard, where it will be as warm as possible, and where cattle will be protected from the cold wind while drinking. Every one has observed the shivering of animals after drinking largely in mid-winter. To prevent this they should have it not less than twice a day. It is the practice of many farmers to let sheep go without water, except that obtained by eating snow, all through the winter. It is a great mistake. They will drink three or four times in a day when they can have water without trouble.

Salt is important in the winter treatment of all kinds of stock. A supply should be placed where they can obtain it at any time. This may be done by putting some lumps in a box under a shed. They will taste a little nearly every day, never eating more than they need. When salted at long intervals, they eat too much, producing bad consequences.

One great object with farmers in wintering stock should be to make as much manure as possible, and save all that is made. For this purpose, if not kept in stables, the cattle should be kept in yards All the manure dropped in the snow path, when wandering after water, or running at random over the fields, is nearly a loss. Domestic animals are the farmers' apparatus by means of which his hay, grain, straw roots, etc., are manufactured into flesh, muscle and bone, as well as elaborated for manure with which to feed the growing crop, and keep the whole farm in the best condition. They should claim a large share of the time and attention of every farmer, for those who give such care reap a rich reward .- W., in Genes-

SHOEING HORSES THAT OVERREACH .- "Why not put the front shoes a little further forward, and the hind shoes a little further backward?" Plainly, because that will not increase the speed of the fore-feet and retard that of the hinder which is just what you want to accomplish .--But to do this, make the toe calks of the forefeet very low, and set the shoe back as far as possible, with high heel-calks. Then reverse this method upon the hind-feet, and the clicking and loosening of the shoe will cease. This will also help the speed of the horse.
