marriage, however opposed to it the trustees of the De Vautpre property during Mademoiselle Beandesert's nonage might be. Lisette was equally, and from the same cau-e, unsuccessful in her efforts to obtain speech of her former mistress, and much more ferociously enraged thereat. But what to the purpose could be effected even by her sharp eyes and sharper tongue ? she pot knowing, not being able even to guess at the true motives prompting Mademoiselle Beaudesert's consent to such marriage.-She, however, quickly undeceived good Madame Sabin, wife of the medical gentlemen who attended Madame de Vautpre in her last illness, as to the note supposed to have been addressed to Paul Delpech by Adrienne Beaudesert, confessing with shame and ceaseless iteration, that was her own scheming handiwork. Lisette, moreover, loudly proclaimed her determination to be present, Plait a Dieu at the Hotel de Ville, and have some conversation with mademoiselle before the abominable ceremony was proceeded with.

The affair wore the same menacing aspect on the afternoon of the day preceding that which was to witness the successful consummation of the Delpech conspiracy. It was the month of September, and growing so dark that Adrienne Beaudesert, still prostrate as well in body as in mind, could no longer read the accord that, as already stated, had been drawn up and signed by the contracting parties, and which she had been perusing and reperusing, in order to more completely satisfy herself that its clauses had been so plainly framed that there could be no aftergenial of their true purport and meaning. Madame and Clarisse Beaudesert were present ; and the latter, more by way of breaking the silence by saying something than influenced by any serious apprehension, said :

"I suppose, dear Adrienne, that the condition of immediate separation conceded and subscribed to by those tiger-hearted Delpech's can if necessary, be legally enforced ?"

Lightning seemed to leap at the remark from Adrienne's darkened, heavy eyes, and she glared at Clarisse as if the words had stabbed her. Mastering herself, she turned and hid her face in the pillows of the couch upon which she was was reclining, was soon apparently asleep, and Madame Beaudesert withdrew with Clarisse upon tiptoe. They were no sooner gone, than Adrienne started up, made her way quietly to the library, selected a Lyons directory, made a memorandum with her pencil, and then ringhave a close carriage in waiting at the back entrance to the chateau within ten minutes.

"La Rue St. Martin, Numero 19-do you know it? The residence of M. l'Avocat Dufresne ?" said Mademoiselle Beaudesert, in answer to the questioning bow of the coachman and was immediately driven off.

M. l'Avocat Dufresne's new and interesting client was so thickly veiled and muffled up that, had she been personally known to him, he would have failed to recognize her, as she placed a heavy fee upon the table, and in a low, trembling voice recited the conditions of the signed accord, suppressing names of course and asked if such a pre-contract could be enforced against the possible opposition of the husband.

"Certainly not, mademoiselle. An accord stipulating that a husband shall not be a husband, is not worth the ink consumed in writ ing it out. That is, no doubt, very well known to some, at least, of the parties that have subscribed such a document.

"Thank you, monsieur ; that is all I require to know."

Adrienne's mind was made up from that moment, nor did she feel the slightest irresolution as to the course she would follow; lead her whithersoever it might ; to a shameful death, there could be little doubt, for the baffled Delpechs would in their rage be sure to persist in quite sufficient authorization of her daughter's | had remained standing. Adrienne alone was calm, unmoved ; but as for Lisette, she was only kept from instant and violent interference by a forbidding gesture from the abbe, and her husband's eager remonstrance : "Doucement -doncement, bonne femme ; thy turn will come presently, never fear 1'

"It appears," resumed M. Morlaix, "from the papers I hold in my hand, that you, Jules aud Paul Delpech, accuse Adrienne Beaude sert of having obtained of you a poisonous drug, named, for the occasion, poudre rose, by which she destroyed the life of her aged re lative, Madame de Vautpre. Is that so ?"

"First, Monsieur l'Abbe," exclaimed Pau Eelpech, whose natural audacity was sustained by drink, early as it was, "tell us by what right or authority you presume to ask such iasolent questions ?

"I ask them to ascertain, before invoking justice, whether the horrible tale is or not an invention."

"We shall say nothing," hastily interposed Delpech senior, forestalling his son's reply .--He fancied the abbe was desirous of hushing up the matter after, if possible, relieving Ma demoiselle Beaudesert's conscience of the burden that oppressed it. This thought gave him momentary courage.

"Are you aware that the punishment of the galleys awaits those who, for the sake of obtaining money or other advantages, invent and circulate false accusation ?"

" Prove any accusations we have made to be false," retorted Paul Delpech ; "and let me assure you, Monsieur l'Abbe, that you are playing with the life of your fair protege. We

"That is not so certain," replied the abbe with unmoved sternness. "Your wicked design may have miscarried ; in fact, it did miscarry-in proof whereof I have to inform you that a post-mortem examination, performed, at my instance, within twenty-four hours of death clearly established the fact, that Madame de Vautpre died from natural causes only."

A cry, a shout, a scream of woman echoed thete blessd words : Adrienne was in a moment clinging to the reverend speaker's knees : Madame Beandesert seemed inclined to cast herself into his arms : Lisette, in a state of intense inflammation, shook her little fists at the cowering Delpechs, prevented only from transforming her threats into deeds by Claude's fast hold of her skirt, and iterated," Doucement-douceing the bell, desired the answering seavant to ment, Lisette ; it will be thy turn presently, never fear."

"Calm yourself, my child," said the abbe,as oon as he could make himself heard, and raising Adrienne, " and you Madame Beaudesert the end of this matter is not yet."

Paul Delpech, stunned, overborne for awhile, reassumed, by a violent effort, his preprevious effrontery, and said in a sucering tone Then, monsieur, if your post-mortem examination was skilfully conducted, the poudre rose was but an innocent, harmless powder after all ; have it so, if you will-and now, mon pere you and I may as well leave this good company-for a time !"

Not so fast, if you please ; you intention may, I repeat have been evil enough-the poudre rose you furnished, a poisonous drug : that is quite another question, upon which Madame Claude Simonet here can throw some light.' "Ha, ha ! cursed rascals !" shouted Claude ow look to yourselves."

" Tais toi, Claude," interrupted Lisette this is what I have to say. For certain reasons, I had come to entertain strong suspicions of Messieurs Delpech ; and I said to myself, rose, nicely sealed up, from Paul Delpech :--'Lisette, my girl, thou hast persuaded thy unsuspecting young mistress to have secret dealings with two good for-nothings-if there are it was useless to attempt concealing from her- Who knows what infernal drug this is which | Builders' Union had organized this movement, self, give color and coherence to all they said. they palm off as poudre rose? The attitude of Austria toward Prussia Russia and England was decidedly hostile ; and an Austrian agitation for a remodeling of the German Confederation was provoking a great deal of ill feeling in Prussia and among the Protestant Germans generally. The Hungarian Constitutionalists were moving for a nciliation with Austria on the basis of the restoration of the old Constitution of Hungary. Public feeling in France in favor of the peace of Villafranca was steadily increasing; and the official intelligence of the intended disarmament had been received with general approval. FORNEY, at Reading, on the 3d inst, explains clearly the present position and plans for the future of "The States Rights Democracy."-It reads as follows : "We have a duty to perform in October next. The Administration has placed its State ticket upon a plain and distinct platform. It tells you that every man who votes for John Rowe and Richardson L. Wright votes in favor of its platform, which declares that the people of the Territories shall have no right to control their own affairs in their own way, and that if they take a vote upon the slavery ques-

Adrienne sat up late that night, busily occupied in writing ; slept soundly the first time for many days ; and rising with the dawn, sent her packet of papers, Delpech's letters included, to the Abbe Morlaix. The three ladies breakfasted as usual in Adrienne's chamber ; and Madame and Clarisse Beaudesert were both struck-shocked, almost, by the cheerfulness visible in the aspect of the supposed bride, on that the hated dreaded, marriage horses !" morning. Little, however, was said, and that little nor relating to the matter pressing exclusively upon their minds, till a message was brought, announcing that the Messieurs Delpech were arrived, and waiting in the grand salon. It had been arranged, I should state, with the municipal authorities that in consideration of Mademoiselle Beaudesert's delicate state of health, the marriage formalities should be gone through at the chateau

Madame Beaudesert and Clarisse, white, trembling in every limb with terror and horror, obeyed the implied summons ; Adrienne promising to follow almost immediately. They found the two Delpechs, as stated, in the grand salon, both evidently in a state of great nervous excitement-the father more especial ly ; and a moment after their own entrance, the Abbe Morlaix, with Lisette and her husband. came in from a further door. No sooner did Jules Delpech perceive the last comers, than, surprised out of all self-control, he made for the door by which he had entered, with the apparent purpose of escaping from the place, but found, to his thereby greatly increased consternation, that it was locked on the outside.

"What can all this mean ?" gleamed from his flurried eyes, and stood out in large drops upon his forehead, as he again, perforce, fronted the company, now increased by the silent entrance of Adrienne Beandesert, who, pale, calm, lustrous as Parian marble, took a seat between her agitated mother and sister. It was difficult to interpret the expression of Lisette's flushed features, but that of the abbe's naturally stern countenance was unmistakably grave, earuest, solemn.

What is the purport of all this dumb show ?" exclaimed the younger Delpech, assuming with some success a front of defiance. "Where are the municipal officials? A priest is not required at these espousals !"

"There will be no espousals," replied the abbe, " between you, Paul Delpech, and Adrienne Beaudesert now or hereafter."

Ha ! Does, then, Mademoiselle Beandesert dare-dare I say, to refuse to ratify her promise ?"

"Yes ; she dares refuse-does refuse to do so, at the peril, you know, of her life. I know all, and from her."

This announcement elicited cries of terror and dismay from Madame and Clarisse Beaudesert Paul Delpech champed a bitter malediction, and his fear-mastered father again distractedly essayed to open the door, close to which he by the falling of walls.

"There is nothing in the packet," said the elder Delpech, hoarsely, "nothing but beanflour. Let us go !"

"That fact must first be ascertained." replied the abbe, "till which time, you cannot eave the chateau. And now, dear child, and you, my friends, let us retire, and return God thanks for this great deliverance."

The poudre rose was nothing but colored bean flour ; the Delpechs were, nevertheless, prosecuted for the conspiracy, and sentenced to severe punishments. Of the further donestic history of the distinguished French family, resident in the south of France, of which the foregoing narative supplies a hastily sketched episode, I know nothing except from the French journals, wherein I have read of of two marriages, and, I think, five births, but not, as yet, one death, having occurred among the descendants of the Beaudeserts.

WISE'S LAST .- A letter claiming to be from Governor Wise was circulated privately at Albany last week during the meeting of the Democratic Convention. It is certainly a most remarkable production. It declares that Mr. Buchanan is a candidate for the Presidency, despite indications to the contrary, and intimates that Wise's only chance for New York is to "organize by districts or send two dele-He depends on a united South, gations." which is to be secured by making Virginia a unit. Mr. Douglas will kick up his heels, but he (Wise) can beat both Seward and Douglas.

He is very free in his comments on the political standing of Fernando Wood. The press generally seems very much divided in opinion as as to the genuineness of the letter: Some think it can't be Wise's because too short, and others that it must be, because so audacious. All agree that if genuine it anhibilates his prospects of success. The Philadelphia Press but

At a special meeting of the "Alpha Epsilon Society," held Thursday evening, August 11, 1859, E. O. GOODRICH, H. B. M'KEAN and E. D. PAYNE were appointed a Committee to prepare resolutions, expressive of the loss sustained by the Society, in the death of ABRAM D. MONTANYE, one of its members. The following preamble and resolutions are reported by the Committee :-

Whereas, It has pleased the Great Ruler, in his wis dom and mercy, to remove from our brotherhood ABRAM D. MONTANYE, creating a void in our fraternal circle, Resolved, That while we bow in humble submission to this dispensation of His Divine grace, who "doeth all things well," we accept the admonition therein contained, to "be also ready," and while mourning our deceased brother, will endeavor to profit by his example, which has taught us how to live to become worthy of the "bet-ter life."

Resolved, That we condole with the relatives of the deceased, in their loss of one who was a consistent Chris-tian, an estimable citizen, a kind father, a faithful friend Resolved, That the usual emblem of mourning be adopted by this Society; a copy of these proceedings be furnished to the family of our deceased brother; and published in the County papers.

Mr. EDITOR :- Seeing some notice in your paper, of the annual meeting of the State Teachers' As sociation at West Chester, I will, with your permission. state to your readers what the good people of that beautiful village did to make the stay of the teachers among them pleasant.

Upon the opening of the meeting, the Chief Burgess of the Boro', bade the members of the Association a most cordial welcome in a short, but forcible speech, which was responded to by the proper officer of the Association. Most nobly did the citizens redeem, and more than redeem all the pledges made by their chief officer. All attending the meeting, who desired it, were entertained at the homes of the citizens without charge, and it was done in no grudging way I assure you ; all were made to feel at home, and if they were not happy, it was their own fault ; then, after all this, they gave a public entertainment at the close of the sessions. The spacious depot of one of the rail-roads was cleared, and tables set its full length, upon which, were placed all the luxuries of the season. A gentleman present, who was in the habit of attending such entertainments, remarked, that he seldom saw as much liberality and good taste displayed on such occasions even in the largest cities of the State, All were happy, the citizens because they were making ! tion and abelish slavery, Congress must vene to put them down, and uphold that institation against their will. I have to say for myself that I shall refuse to vote for that ticket and I hope that every Democrat who stands upon the platform of State-rights, and believes in popular sovereignty and the justice of the movement we have inaugurated and carried on will do the same. Let fossils and fogies complain, if they choose, of this action ; they will submit. There will be no difficulty about that and after we have defeated the Administration upon its platform, we can come together in 1860 upon the old creed of the Democratic party, as expounded by Senator Douglas, and and as advocated by the Democracy in 1856, and triumph, as I have no doubt we shall, over all organizations, by an overwhelming vote.

EIGHT CHILDREN AT A BIRTH !- A correspondent of the New York Trbiune, states that on the 2d inst., Mrs. Timothy Bradley, of the town of Jackson, Trumbull county, Ohio, gave birth to eight children-three boys and five girls. They are all living, and healthy, but quite small. Mr. B.'s family is increasing fast. He was married six years ago to Eunice Mowery, who weighed 273 pounds on the day of their marriage. She has given birth to two 1 02 pair of twins, and now eight more, making twelve children in six years. It seems strange but nevertheless is true, Mrs. B. was a twin of three, her mother and father both being twins. and her grandmother the mother of five pair of twins, Mrs. B. has named her boys after noted and distinguished men : One after the Hon . Joshua R. Giddings, who has given her a splendid gold medal : and one after the Rev. Hon. Elijah Champlin, who gave her a deed of 50 acres of land, and the other after James Johnson, Esq., who gave her a cow. Mr. Bradley says it is profitable to have twins, as the neighbors have clothed the others ever since they were born. Mr. B. is a poor industrious laborer, but says he will not part with any of 1 00 his children while he is able to work.

A telegram from New Orleans, dated 9th instant, says : " Vicksburg Whig of yesterday mentions having seen a letter from General Walker, announcing his intention to head another company emigrating to Nicaragua in a few weeks, and that all parties wishing to go must be in New Orleans by the 18th Septem-1 00 ber."

Messrs. Peck, Carpenter, and Fairchild, of Oberlin, served a notice, on Thursday on the United States marshal, of a suit which has been instituted by them for $20,000 damages, growing out of the rescue case.
