his earliest existence and renewed by sovereign grace when only seven years old, he "witnessed a good confession before many witnesses," in the Church. From that time forward, his heart was set on the ministry and missionary work. To this end he most assiduously labored for his own intellectual and religious development, with a degree of resolute patience and perseverance seldom seen, and a degree of success rarely witnessed, under similar disadvantageous circumstances. He had become thoroughly acquainted with the common school branches, Natural Philosophy, and was ready for his academical and collegiate course, when disease arrested his interest-

His illness and death were in keeping with his brief and brilliant life, since his public profession of religion Calm and cheerful, with prayerful thoughtfulness, he engaged in religious conversation as his pains would per mit, and declared himself willing to live or die, as God should determine. Thus every day of his illness was a sermon to his youthinl acquaintances. Before he expired he called each of his brothers and sisters to his bed side and gave them a melting exhortation, and a parting blessing, then prayed for each of them, including his parents.

Thus the sun of his life went down clear and beautiful in the morning of his days. Thus not only the parents and neighborhood, but the whole Church has been bereaved of one of its most promising sons, and illustrious trophies of God's renewing grace.

About four years ago these same parents buried their second son, who was very similar in character and promise to this one, and about the age. Thus they have two in heaven, and four on earth. " Part have crossed the flood, and part are crossing now." D. COOK, Wyalusing Parsonage, April 17, 1860. Pastor.
