TOWANDA:

Thursday Morning, August 9, 1860.

SPEECH OF HON. J. M. HICKMAN, OF PENNSYLVANIA,

At Philadelphia, July 24th, 1860.

THE ISSUES AND THE CANDIDATES.

MR. PRESIDENT AND GENTLEMEN: The intelligent voter will see his action as to make it conduce to the success of a principle, rather than the elevation of a man. He will feel this to be the more incumbent upon him at such a time as the present, when the tendencies of parties are more distinctly marked than in any previous campaign. It will be my object, this evening, to endeavor to exhibit in a distinct light, the dividing line between the political parties of the day, and to ascertain, if possible, what, in all probability, would be the effect, upon the country, of the election of the respective candidates for the Presidency.

If this were a strife merely between individual men, it would possess but trifling importance, and I should not trouble you with either remark or suggestion. But as I regard the contest, the determination will soon be made, not alone as to our value in the Confederacy, but as to the destiny of the nation itself.

The policy of our Government is, in many respects, undefined. The more serious questions affecting us have but recently become topics of careful consideration. Our fathers were unable to foresee, during the formation of the Constitution, the greater embarrassments to which the future of the country was to be subjected, and consequently no provision was made against them. Subjects which distracted and divided them, in their deliberations, have lost much of their former consequence, and we seem to be more anxious to ascertain what they should have said further, than what they actually did say. Even the controversies in which we ourselves have been engaged within the last decade have been settled or lost sight of, and we are now about to enter into that conflict which is to define many of the most important powers of the Government, and to fix the character of the dominant institutions of the country. The propriety of re-eligibility to office, the exact relations between Federal and local authority, the constitutionality of banks and internal improvements, the regulation of the currency, and the distribution of the proceeds of the public lands, are no longer agitated; and discussions upon them are only to be found in our past history, and in the fossil remains of extinct parties. It may in truth be said that old things have passed away and all things have become new.

There was a time, not very far back in the past, when Slavery was universally admitted to be a wrong in its nature, in its practice, detrimental to both individuals and communities, and against the spirit and genius of our free system. Now, however, it is declared to be divine in its origin, the highest type of human civilization, and indispensable to the maintenance of a Democratic Republic. Formerly it was regarded as a condition to be constantly reduced, and finally to be extinguished. Now, on the contrary, the demand is urged that it shall be extended, and made controlling. Here I find the cause or source of the great political issue of the present.— Shall Slavery become a national institution and a governing power in the country, or shall it remain as the Constitution left it? This is not an inquiry propounded by us, of the North, but forced upon us by our brethren of the South. They require an answer at our hands, and we cannot avoid response if we would.— Silence upon our part, under the circumstances, could not be construed otherwise than as affirmative of their claims. I make the distinction avowal that Slavery seeks the acquisition of all our new States; for two objects: first, to secure the value of slaves; and, second, to direct the powers of the Federal Government.

"The irrepressible conflict," so frequently commented on and denounced by the South, is constantly admitted and acted on by them. They are too astute as observers and sagacious as politicians not to know there is a necessary and unending antagonism between Liberty and Slavery. If they thought differently there would be far more peace and harmony between the sections. It is their full appreciation of the struggle for the mastery which arms them for the conflict, and induces them to wrestle for the victory. There is no more evident fact than this, that the advocates of Slavery seek its extension so as to limit the influence of the sentiment of freedom. We hate tyranny, and would prevent such a consummation. They ask that all who toil shall be held as property—be regarded, in the chaste language of an eloquent Senator, as "mud-sills." We believe that God created all men free, and imposed labor upon them for their advantage. Which hypothesis shall be proven true? We will see hereafter! But knowing that the principles of justice are uniform and eternal, I presume to believe that those principles will prevail and human rights be maintained. I am not ignorant of the fact that those who suppose they may rightfully make merchandise of mothers and their children, seem to think they can shape the designs of Providence, and re-write the history of humanity, reversing everything our fathers thought, and for the maintenance of which they periled life and honor. I must be pardoned for disagreeing with them, and protesting against such conclusions.

The extension of negro Slavery into the Territories of the United States has become a settled policy of the Democratic Party. This reality cannot be disguised, and ought not to be denied. It is easily accounted for. Unity of interest and unity of desire will always produce a perfect concentration of strength. The fortunes of the South have become completely identified with their peculiar domestic relations. By their harmony they have been enabled to govern the Democratic Party, and, thus far, to govern the country through the agency of that party. The vital force of that organization being in the South, and Slavery propagandism regarded there as a necessity, it cannot be considered strange that the influence of the party should be so directed as to fortify doctrines most congenial to the supposed welfare of those who direct its machinery. To many it has seemed unaccountable that executive action and legislative and judicial proceedings should be so shaped, from year to year, as to strengthen the few at the expense of the great mass of our people. Let it no longer be regarded as a marvel or a mystery; the responsibility of it rests with those Northern men in whom we have reposed our confidence and clothed with the garments of authority. Examine the recorded votes in your National Congress, and there learn why it is that Northern capital and labor are constantly borne down by the enormous weight of Southern exaction. When your reasonable requests are denied, I tell you with earnestness and emphasis, it is because eight millions of men control eighteen millions through our representatives elected by a party pledged to interests adverse to ours. Slavery educates its statesmen in a high school under able professors. It teaches that the Northern men are cowardly, and that their ambition is linked with avarice; and, unfortunately for us, it has arguments to fortify its faith. In half a century it may not be credited that less than a dozen men, trained under these circumstances, so alarmed a Pennsylvania President as to induce him to recast a message, violate the pledged faith upon which he was elected, disgrace his native State, and degrade the high office to which he had then but recently been elevated. And yet not only this has been done almost within our presence, but the representatives of free constitutions have been induced to lend their aid to force servile labor into competition with that of the white man, and a Slave State into the sisterhood of independencies, to throw the balance of power against their own people. Some of these are now not only respectable members of the Douglas church, but missionaries among the unbelieving and outside barbarians. I have some of them very distinctly in my recollection, and it would be quite refreshing to hear their remarks in laudation of Popular Sovereignty, such as they denied to Kansas, and in denunciation of Southern demands, to which they succumbed as reluctantly as a thrice-seduced damsel to her lover. I believe it was Mirabeau who said "the presents of despotism are always dangerous;" he should have included, in his remark, the threat of the tyrant, as well as his reward.

The allegations that Southern combinations are formed for the purpose of counteracting opposition extremists, is a sheer false pretense, resorted to as a blind and a cheat. No fears ever sprung from such parentage. Slavery does not exist by legal enactment anywhere; it is the child of force, and as the sentiment of the world is against it, it cannot live without the sustaining hand of power. Surrounded by an atmosphere of freedom it is necessarily unsafe, and statutory safeguards and defenses become necessary. Vassalage and subjection never impress themselves, without violence, upon the natural man, whilst, on the contrary, the sentiment of freedom must forever disturb the subjects of a despotism. The South, to be safe, must, therefore, extend through and beyond all the countervailing influences to which I have referred, and consequently, our frontier possessions must be captured. But as the inherent weakness of the South is not equal to this task, craft is resorted to to supply the needed assistance. Upon whom can this be more advantageously brought to bear than a President without courage, a judge without candor, or a legislator without integrity? We are sold or betrayed hourly, and if we had not more forbearance than discretion we would terrify traitors. Millions of acres of fertile lands, every now and then, are fished from our industrial classes, who require them for the support and education of their families, to be turned into barren wastes, by those whose who have already blasted more than one-half of our soil as with an avalanche of fire. Factories and work-shops are tottering in ruins, and families and neighborhoods left starving and in rags, because fostered industry is not required in that region where the laboring man has no rights which the owner of men is bound to respect. And ships rot at our wharves, and storehouses become but a rendezvous for idlers and vagrants for the reason that uncompensated chattel sinews yield fruits more cheaply than compensated skill, and require no shield against the panper products of Europe. If a change of tariff laws were required by the South instead of the North, they could not fail of its accomplishment. In that case the President would advocate it with ardor, if not with sincerity, and our Senators would again illustrate the fact of their trucking subservience to those who secretly abhor their baseness and infidelity. Our earnest wishes are not only constantly disregarded, but our prosperity is remorselessly paralyzed by our servants, without an audible murmur on our part; and we are not much averse, as we have often proven, to conferring new leases of office upon such as deceive us, to afford them further opportunities for mischief. Does this seem unaccountable? I suggest no, in view of the truth I have but just stated, that the party selecting them has its heart and brain in the South, and its obeying members, merely, in the North. The remedy for this shameless evil is as easy as it is simple. We need but imitate the example set us by those who have caused this condition of things. Concord and inflexibility of purpose will accomplish all we ask. Nothing else ever can or ever will. We might as well expect a divided and discordant army, marshaled under opposing generals, to capture the powerful and thoroughly disciplined and guarded city, as for Northern rights and Northern honor to be sustained by men in the pay and keeping of those who would weaken and reduce us. In the ordinary business of life we never trust the faithless and dishonest; I can imagine no reason for engaging such as sentinels over our entire fortunes. Just so long as our custom-houses, post offices, navy-yards, and mints shall be stocked with thousands, selected virtually by those who are in banded opposition to us, and whose principal business, we are instructed to believe, is compounding politics with perfidy, it will be impossible to render our condition better than it is. These leper-yards must be cleansed.— Their occupants load the air with a contagious corruption. Throughout their bodies and their souls, they bear the marks of the distemper with which the aristocratic pollution has touched them. I risk but little in saying, that at this very hour, this mighty phalanx, scattered throughout the eighteen Northern States, having a common and powerful bond of union, are devising measures to despoil our industrial classes, by confining them in densely crowded fields of labor, or forcing them to enter into competition and companionship with ignorant and brutalized bondmen. They, all, yes, all, have been brought to believe that the doctrines of the Declaration of Independence are but stereotyped lies; that the founders of the nation had but a sorry conception of inalienable rights; that the Constitution which they framed was intended as an instrument of cruelty and crime; and that the fairest feature of free republican association is a union of States peopled with the lowest grade of slaves. Am I right? What is the trouble against which we have to contend? Is it not the steady influence of what may with propriety be called political conspiracies to mislead the public mind, and taint the public heart? Is it not an administration blackened with treachery, and crooked and tottering under the weight of its depravity, using all the patronage of office, and all the fascinations of position to utterly destroy us, by making the Territories of the country but garrisons for the enemies of freedom, and the labor of white men degrading and fruitless, beyond the limits of the present States? If I am in error, what is the correct interpretation of the political discords of the last six years?

I anticipate fully that my suggested mode of redress for existing abuses will be denounced as sectional; to which I answer, if it be so the antidote to a bane may be a bane itself, "similia similibus curantur." But its liability to the charge is denied. The real sectionalism is arrayed against us; I do but counsel systematic and persistent resistance. In studies of the fundamental doctrines of our common charter, and in the dispensations of the favors of government, we should never know a North a South, an East or a West. My complaint is that others act as if they thought differently. I trust we shall always be able to command the exercise of such a patriotism and comity as to forever preclude us from aggression upon a section inferior to ours in every element of material strength and greatness. It can never be otherwise than dastardly to press upon the weak and sickly.

It will be noticed that I have spoken of the Democratic Party without reference to its present distractions. My reason for so doing is found in the opinion I entertain that these distractions do not affect issues; as neither branch indicates a disposition to meet, fairly and openly, the great political problem of the times. In casting our votes we should be accurately informed as to their effect upon the policy we desire to see established. We should not be made instruments in the hands of any ambitious man, or in the hands of any combination of reckless and unscrupulous men; to force an unnatural growth of Slavery in the country, and to blast the hopes of our own people, contrary to what has heretofore been the understanding of the Constitution of the United States, and in palpable violation of what has been regarded a settled national policy. It should be a matter of stinging regret to us, if from our bearing in the present contest, we could fairly be charged herewith a violation of the principles we have long professed to cherish, or with having imposed any, the slightest, impediment in the pathway of a rational, well grounded and progressive liberty.

The all-absorbing question now presented to the American citizen, for what will prove to be his ultimate decision, I have watched narrowly as it has risen into importance from year to year, and I think I know the opinions of the several Presidential candidates respecting it.

I am not aware that the supporters of Mr. BRECKINRIDGE attempt any concealment as to his designs in case of his success. If they should desire to resort to prevarication, they have placed it entirely without their power by the frankness and boldness, and I had almost said the recklessness of their declarations. He has been put forth prominently, alike in speech and platform, as the Achilles of the armies of the South, and as the determined foe of free soil, free speech and free men. He stands upon no single Democratic sentiment, unless, indeed, what were regarded by all statesmen within the last fifteen years as the pretentious heresies of JOHN C. CALHOUN, can be so regarded. He so reads the teachings of the sages of the past and their primary law, as to make it fruitless to attempt an exclusion of his peculiar and favorite institution from the organized Territories; and so as to make it indispensable that Congress, Courts and Presidents should exercise all their ingenuity and all their powers to fortify and sustain it there. Legislative action is to be invoked, judicial decrees had, executive fiat pronounced, navies equipped, and armies marshaled, to exclude forever every settler therefrom who will not bow down before the black god of his idolatrous worship. I appeal to you freemen, to know whether this is the democracy of JEFFERSON, MADISON, MONROE and JACKSON. I appeal to you to know whether you have ever found anything in the annals of parties so insulting to the understanding, until within the lifetime of the youth who has not yet reached his majority.— I appeal to you to know whether the honesty, intelligence, and unmixt blood of the offspring of northern mothers can ever accept an excuse for those who would endeavor to fasten such a ruler upon us. But we may congratulate ourselves that even official zeal can perceive no chance for Mr. BRECKINRIDGE'S election. If there had ever been any, the recent stamp speech of Mr. BUCHANAN would have effectually disposed of it. No amount of popularity would be able to stand against the economic of such an advocate. His midnight appeal can only be accounted for by supposing the "old public functionary" was unable to obliterate his animosities towards "the young gentleman of Kentucky," and that his well-known craft suggested a speech as the readiest and least offensive means of destruction. Such suggestions are the more reasonable as it is not to be imagined that the gyved tenant of the White House should for a moment believe, after the investigations which have been had, and the exposures which have been made, such testimony as he volunteered could be otherwise than ruinous to any course. The daring evinced by him on this occasion was only equalled by his lack of respect, and his utter disregard of the circumstances by which he was surrounded and which should have restrained him.

Whatever conclusion may be drawn as to my estimate of Mr. Breckinridge's character as a politician, I can only say that my esteem for him is profound when brought into comparison with that which I entertain for his Democratic competitor. There are few, if any, living men concerning whom more has been said, and less really known, than Stephen A. Douglas of Illinois. There are thousands, by far too many thousands, now sustaining him under the mistaken and delusive idea that he is directing his efforts to counteract the plans of the Southern Democracy. This is a frightful hallucination, but a natural one, when we take into consideration the humiliating fact that all that devotion could do has been done, by those surrounding his person, to distort a true record, and to stamp a counterfeit character for him on the public mind. Viewing him as one of the most unsafe and treacherous leaders, you will pardon me certain statements which it now seems necessary should be made, and the correctness of which I presume will not be impugned. I have not yet forgotten when, in the Winter of 1855-6, during the first session of the Thirty-fourth Congress, the residents of Kansas, asserting that the cardinal principle of the Nebraska-Kansas act had been wantonly and wickedly nullified, that fraud and violence, concocted in the blue-logs of Missouri, had invaded their homes and imposed a foreign rule upon them for the purpose of forcing upon them institutions which they abhorred, and invoking the interposition of Congress in their behalf, the prided father of "untrammeled popular sovereignty" turned his back upon his violated child, and closed his ears, as in death, to complaints of outrage almost without a parallel in the civilization of the century. These despoiled pioneers, who had taken up their abode in the Territory under the most solemn guarantee of self-government, only asked to prove their accusation, and to be relieved from oppression. In other words, they declared they had never been able to enjoy self-government, that they were ruled by invaders, and demanded the sovereignty conferred by law upon them. Mr. Douglas should have been the first man to fly to their relief; and if he had been as completely dedicated to the principles of his bill, as some would have us believe, he would have urged investigation and carried it. So far from having done so, he put himself in the lead of those Senators more hostile to an exposition, and became the mere mouth-piece, advocate and apologist of those engaged in the work of forcing Slavery upon an unwilling people. He enjoyed at that time the full confidence of the South, and his Democracy was orthodox,—because he was loyal to his task-masters; willing to do battle for their most extravagant demands. He was then Chairman of the Committee on Territories, and I call attention to his report as such, made March 12, 1856, as conclusive upon the point I have stated. In that paper he could find nothing to say against foreign conspiracies to invade the soil of Kansas and control elections, but he had much to offer in condemnation of Eastern associations to encourage removal thither. He could discover no irregularities in the return of Mr. Whitfield, the Pro-Slavery Delegate to the House of Representatives, but he clearly discerned that the Territorial Legislature was a legal-y-elected body, with perfect authority to enact the most cruel and arbitrary slave codes, and that the complaints of fraud and force were got up merely to stimulate and excite Northern emigration. At the time of which I speak, there was no one in Congress or out of Congress, in office or out of office, who exerted himself more untiringly to perpetuate that reign of terror inaugurated to insure the admission of Kansas into the Union as a Slave State. I fear there are many now bearing up the banner inscribed with the name of this Senator, who never have fully understood, or who have forgotten, this tarnished page in his history. If there has ever been a more determined foe to the growth of freedom in Kansas, or to the principles of the Kansas-Nebraska bill, than Stephen A. Douglas, he has been able to keep himself very much under cover. It is gratifying, however, to make a single remark in his favor; it is this: that he seems as willing as the most ardent of his friends to divert attention from this period in his career. I am not aware that, in either essay or address, he has ventured to recur to it; but, on the contrary, he seems disposed to treat it as a blank in his life.

While these proceedings were progressing in the Senate, the other branch of Congress carried resolutions of investigation under a close division of parties, and sent a Select Committee to the Territory. The consequence was such an exposure as satisfied the country not only of the truth of everything charged, but of existing conspiracies beyond anything that had been imagined. The published evidence effectually revealed the intentions of the South, and made a deep impression upon the North. It was then established that neither law nor propriety were to be allowed to stand in the way of Slavery extension; and we are almost driven to the conclusion that the repeal of the Missouri Restriction was but a part of a general and well-majored plan of operations, at the head of which stood the self-crowned chief of popular territorial government. Mr. Douglas' term of office was now approaching its close. It is not unlikely that a desire for a re-election, and a knowledge of a conviction forced upon his State by the examination alluded to, induced him to look with different eyes upon Kansas, and created an anxiety on his part to take up the cause of her robbed and wretched people. I cannot certainly say how this may have been, I only state a sudden and miraculous change came over him, and for a while he seemed to glory in the name of "rebel." He opposed the admission of Kansas under the Lecompton Constitution with seeming seriousness, and then announced his determination to vote for the greater iniquity, the "English bill." It was then the honored and heroic Harris, who now sleeps in death, shed tears of anguish, and gave utterance to his despair. Over this again the veil has been carefully and closely drawn by the guardians of Mr. Douglas' fame. His admirers have acted wisely as it has prevented, doubtless, many unpleasant surmises and suggestions.— To that boldest, and truest, and greatest, of all the warriors in the battle for the right, David C. Broderick, is Mr. Douglas indebted for his rescue from a whirlpool which would certainly have engulfed him—from a stain which would have obliterated his heroism in connection with the cause to which he has so ostentatiously professed to devote himself. I withhold the words in which the scathing rebuke was clothed. And yet this noblest and most self-sacrificing of men, Mr. Douglas' protector, the martyr to truth, who in the fullness of his heart and on his dying couch exclaimed, "they have killed me, they have murdered me, because I was opposed to the extension of Slavery and a corrupt Administration" upon his return home, and in the hour of his earnest trial, when fighting, like Spartacus, upon his bended knees, against the pensioned hordes of the present dynasty, and at a time when he had a right to expect all possible aid from the man whose interest he had made his own, found all the sympathies of Mr. Douglas extended to his opponents, and himself treated as an enemy and an off-act. If we would respect the memory of Broderick we can never support Douglas; it would be a mark of baseness and servility. It ever there was a true son of the North, inhumanly broken in spirit, and who had reason to exclaim, "Save me from my friends," that man was David C. Broderick.

Had STEPHEN A. DOUGLAS but discharged the duty he secretly owed him, he would have gained a victory for freedom in California, and would to-day in my opinion, be living in the land, and acknowledged as one of the foremost men in the Republic. He laid down his life to attest his sincerity; many who professed to love him well, in wild revel and reckless exultation, utter the name of him who could not find time or opportunity to speak a word in eulogy over the grave of the departed votary. Inscribe the name of BRODERICK in fiery characters upon your banners—he was your champion—and you, at least, can afford to do him justice. He rests in peace on the heights of the proud city of the Pacific, where no ingratitude can longer wound him, relieved from the warfare between heartless factions, and where his ashes will remain an eternal memento of his faith and his confidence in the ultimate triumph of a down-trodden humanity.

These references have been made for a single purpose, to satisfy, if doubts exist, that in the great struggle between the South and the North to secure the long lost equality of the latter, Mr. DOUGLAS is against us. Should more recent evidence be demanded, then let an examination be made of the Congressional Globe containing the ballots for Speaker and Clerk during the last session of the House of Representatives. Ascertain what the action of Illinois, Western and Northwestern Democracy was during the protracted contest for an organization. Every vote that Mr. DOUGLAS could influence was invariably cast for such candidates as the South presented, including those of the most extreme and revolutionary character. He could afford no assistance to any one not recognized by the propagandists as orthodox upon all questions which concerned them. And I very well remember when the name of Col. FORNEY was mentioned in connection with the office he now occupies, and his fate was to be decided, how diligently "the great advocate of Popular Sovereignty" labored for his defeat; every devoted of Mr. DOUGLAS voting against him with one exception. Mr. MORRIS, of Illinois, in whom I have great confidence, declined to vote at all. Col. FORNEY, who never hesitated to advance the fortunes of Mr. DOUGLAS, when he could properly do so, was elected in spite of Mr. DOUGLAS. Col. FORNEY, I presume, was not indorsed by the Democracy who swear by the peculiar institution. Others may choose to forget all this, and I will not criminate them for doing so, but I promise never to forget it. I am for my friends and against those who oppose my friends. If I am wrong in this let charity be extended to me.—I cannot help it.

I have said all desire to say of the Representatives of the two Democracies. There is a preference between them. The one is outspoken and evident; the other is concealed and tricky. Of the two I must prefer Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, and yet I cannot imagine the circumstance under which I could be induced to support him. He asserts the Supreme Court has decided that Slavery is an existing constitutional institution in all our Territories, and that is the duty of the Government to sustain it where it thus legally exists.

Mr. DOUGLAS contends the Courts have not yet so decided, but if they shall do so, it will then become the duty of all citizens to respect the decision, and of every branch of the Federal Government to enforce it with promptness and fidelity. This is his Platform. If our Federal Court has not already given a decision in accordance with the notions of Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, no one doubts it will do so as soon as the question shall be brought distinctly before it. So at best the only point of disagreement between these rival candidates, is that of time only. If, in the language of the resolution adopted by the Convention placing Mr. DOUGLAS in nomination, and just partly quoted, it becomes the duty of all good citizens to respect and of every branch of the Federal Government to enforce a judicial decision determining the constitutional existence of Slavery in our Territories, what becomes of that other theory of Mr. DOUGLAS, that no matter what the Supreme Court may decide, Slavery may be excluded from a Territory by unfriendly legislation? Those advocating the claims of Mr. BELL would please everybody by promising nothing. They compose the party of extreme faith.— They stand upon a Constitution without interpretation, and upon an endangered Union without announcing the means by which it can be saved.

Let us not be deceived! There are but two doctrines between which we can choose when we come to deposit our ballots. One is, that the Constitution favors Slavery as fully Freedom; that neither has advantage over the other; that they must travel together and exist together, under equal protection, until the territory shall be clothed with State sovereignty and that both alike are national. The other is that the Constitution treats Slavery as a local municipal institution; does not give to it a single attribute of nationality; that it has not an equal status with freedom; and that its extension is to be discouraged. How shall we act between these opposing views? I answer the inquiry! Our laboring classes deserve all the encouragement and protection we can give them; Southern statesmen regard them as white slaves; let us not surrender them to such mercies as the owners of chattel-labor would extend to them. Our farmers and manufacturers have long been cut off from all the bounties of legislation by the force of Southern prejudice; we should enlist on their side. Our country has suffered much in the estimation of mankind, from our manifested attachment to a system notoriously in counteraction to the principles upon which our Government was founded; considerations of morality, expediency and consistency should incline us to do all that we lawfully may do to save ourselves from further imputations. Slavery within the States stands behind impregnable defences, but it holds no charter to travel without restraint. It has long labored for but has not yet reached, a position of absolutism. It grasps for empire, as it is the only means by which tyranny can ever save itself. Our danger is imminent, but we can yet overcome it, if we allow reason rather than prejudice to shape our efforts. Democracy, as now interpreted by those loudest in the profession of it, and almost monopolizing its name, no longer means the will of the majority; it contemns the masses; holds no association with labor, and utters no word of encouragement to the poor. Its professions are impostures, and must soon fail to deceive. It has become worse than the ally of Slavery; it is its plant and prostituted tool. Wisdom and propriety alike repudiate it, unless speedily regenerated.

Our true policy is that of resistance to the extravagant and unconstitutional demands of the South. We can only make it effectual in one way—by the support of Mr. LINCOLN. He is honest, and capable, and attached to the principles of the Constitution, and, his election will assign limits to sectionable oligarchy, and make labor honorable and remunerative.

The question, in its true aspect, is not as to which candidate should be elected by the people; it is this—shall Mr. LINCOLN be elected? The one hundred and twenty electoral votes of the south will be divided mainly, if not exclusively, between Mr. BELL and Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, and their support will be almost, if not entirely, confined to that section. Such effective force as Mr. DOUGLAS may possess, is in the North; but his most sanguine friends admit not only that his election is impossible, but that he cannot carry over two or three States. The body of the Northern vote will be given to Mr. LINCOLN. Mr. DOUGLAS' supporters can do nothing for him; the only significant result they can possibly produce, will be to withdraw enough strength from Mr. LINCOLN to throw the election into the House. This done, and LANE would certainly be chosen by the Senate—the condition of parties in the House being such as to prevent a majority of the States agreeing to either of the candidates resting on these admissions—for they are accepted universally—we discover that every vote given to Mr. DOUGLAS must tend to the elevation of LANE, who, possessing neither education, experience, nor executive ability, has been selected, to enable the South to make the most out of an accident in case it shall occur. To out-LANE LANE in apostasy to the North, and in cringing, fawning subservency to the South, need not be attempted by the most ambitious in that line—not even by a Federal office-holder. Even if I could believe that the leopard could change his spots, and Mr. DOUGLAS do the North justice, I would not sustain him under the circumstances which surround us, and amid the perils which now environ us.

I have not attempted a speech. My purpose has been to talk plainly. I may have been unfortunate in succeeding too well in this respect. Feeling, as I do, and knowing the vast importance of the canvass upon which we are just entering, I could not be less distinct in my expressions. Immense, unprecipitated consequences depend upon the decision we are about to make. We should tremble when we fear that those most interested in the present and the future, the frugal artisan and laborer, may fail to comprehend them. But let us hope, citizens, that we are so far right as to be able to expect the favor of Almighty God throughout our trials, and that He will continue to bless the Republic until it shall become a proper example to the nations of the earth, and a blessing to universal man.

When Dr. Lucas ventured on a speech in the Irish Parliament, and failed altogether, Grattan said, "He rose without a friend, and sat down without an enemy."
