

er be good, the cocks may be opened awhile, and then carted in, or stacked. If not convenient to house it at once, it may stand in the cock uninjured for several days. If rain should get into the windrows or cocks, they must be spread and dried. Just here the hay caps come in play ; and each cock of hay may with very little expense be safely tended, and be almost as secure as though stored in the barn.

The manner of putting up the cocks is no triffing thing It is not enough to roll the hay into big bundles; for if thus managed, the cocks will absorb rain instead of shedding it, and will be very apt to blow over in high winds. Let them be laid up carefully, by placing one fork-full on top of the other, making the heaps tall and not broad, and dressing them off with the pitchfork, like a thatched roof. They will then stand several weeks of all sorts of weather, uninjured.

Sometimes, it is found necessary to get in hay when a little too green. In such cases, it is well to mix in an occassional layer of old hay or dry straw. This will absorb the surplus moisture of the green hay, and the dry fodder will itself be improved by it. It is al

CARE OF HARNESS .- Leather is seldom injured by being wet if hung| up to dry, instead of being left in a mass on the flcor or in a corner, where the drying is so slow as to create mould. For general use, harness should be fairly oiled, and for this purpose either pure neat's foot oil should be used, or the article known by the curriers as daubing ; and this should pe rubbed in while the !eather is moist, but not wet. The harness should be wrapped up in wet cloth one day before the application of daubing, or neat's foot oil ; this should be rubbed on smartly with a brush for a sufficient length of time to insure its entrance into the leather rather than leave it upon its immediate surface. If the leather be positively dry, this substance cannot enter, and therefore the necessity of its being moist and pliant at the time of application. Varnish should never be appled ; it fills the pores and prevents the necessary access of the air, causing the leather to become crisp and rigid, and in a short space of time it is rendered tender, causing it to crack, break, &c. Before applying any oily substance to leather, all dirt should be thoroughly removed from its surface, and no other material than lampblack should ever be mixed with oil where it is necessary to blacken the leather. Shoe blacking is sometimes used, and always with injurious effects; it frequently contains sulphuric acid, which when brought in contact with leather, rapidly destroys it. When the leather is very dry, as with boots and shoes, the injury from this cause is not so very great. Vegetable oils should never be applied to har ness of any kind, for after a while they harden the leather and destroy its usefulness. Leather curtains should never be varnished, but always kept perfectly pliant by very moderate and frequent application of the oils we have named.

SALTING HAY .-- This is a well established practice among farmers, and is of use if the hay is not fully cured when housed. We prefer to have hay well cured, without salt, and this can always be done, now that we have hay caps to guard against storm. Salt has a preserving quality, but the hay may be so green as to heat in spite of it, or so much course salt may be used that it will not all be dissolved. Fine salt is better than coarse, as it can be more equally distributed through the mass.
