AUTUMN .- Already the days of Sepember have ushered in with radiant splendor the third quarter of the year, and the hours now speeding on time's Division No. 103, S. of T., will hold a calendar are redolent with the fragrance and glory which clings in beauty to the hill-side-nestles in loveliness in every valley-mantles both forest and fern in radiant raiment-and brings to the heart in hopeful gleam and fitful shadow the memories of other years, when youth was in its spring time, and life floated as merrily on as a dream of sunny May. The emerald carpet of earth has faded into a regal bronze—the maiden promise of April has its glad fulfilment in the matron fruition wherein Oc tober soon will revel; while the vesper of birds, the lullaby of streamlets, the harp-music of night winds, all are singing the requiem of departed summer. Yonder flutter the purple pennons of the corn—above, the sky sleeps in its cradle of blue—over the way the maple leaves are blushing with crimson kisses-and legal robes are donned by our autumnal monarch. Now

"The arch of trees their gothic aisles display. The curtained clouds are drawn above your head, With this great Cathedral knell to day!"

The sweetest of American lyrists has, as we think most mistakenly termed these days the saddest of all the year. Not so-beauty that is peerless, glory that is matchless, and majesty that is imperial, cluster around these ideas of autumn. The hours are laden with aroma Freeman's Appeal, was last week arrested and sent to of grapes—the perfume of rosy apples—the fragrance of ort Lafayette, for publishing treasonable articles. There blushing peaches—the splendor of starry skies which gives a halo to September, and sounds another heart-beat of joy over a world of loveliness.
