How to Prevent Galled Shoulders in Horses.

Messrs. Editors:—Nothing worries a human man more than the sight of a horse with galled and raw or bleeding shoulders, being compelled to work. The inhumanity of keeping animals to work when in this condition, is too glaring and reprehensible, it would seem, to render reproach necessary, and yet we behold instances of this kind of barbarity, almost daily. With the hope of contributing in some slight degree to the amelioration of the condition of my valued friend, the horse, in this one particular, I think you will aid me greatly in the accomplishment of this object by giving place to the following, which I clip from the Germantown Telegraph. It is sound and sensible, and deserves the close and careful perusal of every farmer:

"As making havelocks for the protection of the neck is now all the fashion, says a correspondent of the Germantown Telegraph, I have concluded to send you an account and directions for making some, which I have in use, and like very well indeed. Some say that if a collar fits a horse as it should, he will never have sore shoulders. Now I do not think that this is the case, for I have a pair of horses who could not be worked at plowing or harrowing a week without having sore shoulders, yet their collars fitted them well. It seemed that one hide had to be rubbed, and as that of the collar was the hardest, the consequence was that the horses' hide got the rubbing. The galls I could soon cure, but if the horses worked I could not prevent them. Chancing one day to take hold of an English agricultural journal, the first thing which I noticed was an editorial proposing that a piece of leather should be laid on the horses' neck under and disconnected from the collar. I saw that the theory was good, and concluded that as one hide had to take a rubbing, the collar and the leather might settle it between them as best they could. So having procured paper and scissors, I cut out a pattern for my havelock. I cut the pattern so it could be sewed together on the top of the neck and in front of the breast, and at the same time fit the neck neatly without creasing. They were made considerably wider than the collar, say from ten inches to one foot. I then applied my patterns to a piece of leather, and cut out their counterparts and sewed them together, and after soaking them over night, I applied them to the horses' necks, taking care to keep them smooth and nice. Since then my horses have never had sore shoulders; and any one seeing the havelock after three months' use, would not wonder that the horses' shoulders ever got sore. I have cured the shoulders of horses with the following compound:—Good brandy, one quart; one-half pound alum powdered.

The brandy and alum should be placed in a bottle, and when used should be well shaken. The mixture should be rubbed on with a sponge, and a pad (an old stocking leg stuffed with straw) should be placed below the galls, and I will insure a cure if the collar is soft as it should be. I have cured shoulders with this mixture even when the skin was broken, without even taking the horse from his work. But use the havelocks, and you won't want the mixture.—Farmer and Gardener.

Advantages of Broad Tires for Carts.

These are made four to six inches in breadth, and usually of somewhat thinner tire, to save weight. The wheels have to be a little heavier to accommodate the tire. The advantages over the common tire are several. Used upon the highway, they tend to fill up the ruts made by smaller vehicles, and help to keep the road track in good repair. So highly is this advantage esteemed by turnpike companies, that they exempt all broad tired carts from toll. If they were generally used, they would act upon the road bed very much as a heavy roller, keeping it solid, and preventing washing to some extent.

The broad tire also diminishes the resistance made by the road bed or soil over which the wheels pass. Upon a perfectly solid bed, like a plate of iron, or iron rails, this resistance is entirely removed, for, at least, brought to its minimum. But upon a common road, it seriously interferes with their progress. The wheels sink into the dirt, more or less, according to the weight of the load, and the hardness of the road. Upon meadow lands, the resistance is still further increased by the softness of the soil. The broader the surface of the wheel, the less it will sink into the soil, and the more easily the load can be drawn. It is not necessary to state the precise ratio in which the resistance is diminished to make it apparent. Other things equal, a team will draw a heavier load with a broad tired cart, than with a narrow one. If this advantage amounted to only a hundred pounds to a load, it would pay for the extra cost of the tire.

It also saves the cutting up the meadows. More or less carting is necessary over fields in grass, at seasons of the year when ruts will be made with the narrow tire. This not only mars the beauty of the field, but diminishes the yield. The roots of the grass are torn and destroyed, and the track of the wheel is generally barren. With the broad tire, little if any damage is done. It also enables the farmer to use the cart on soft swampy land that would be impossible with narrow tire. These may be drained, but are not, and will not be for some years. While waiting for tiles, the broad-tire cart is needed.—CONNECTICUT, in Farmer and Gardener.

AN EFFECTUAL CURE FOR THE BERACHE.

Take a small piece of cotton batting, or cotton wool, make a depression in the centre with the end of the finger, and fill it with as much ground pepper as will rest on a five cent piece, gather it into a ball and tie it up, dip the ball into sweet oil and insert it in the ear, covering the latter with cotton wool, and use a bandage or cap to retain it in its place. Almost instant relief will be experienced, and the application is so gentle that an infant will not be injured by it, but experience relief as well as adults.

KEEP PIGS CLEAN.

Many farmers, says a contemporary, make their pigs live in dirt, and then charge them with a fondness of filth. This is oppression and slander combined. A "hog pen" has become proverbially a repulsive place, but this is the owner's fault. No animal can thrive unless kept clean. A hog likes to be carried as well as a horse. This cannot always be done, but, at least, let them have a bed of clean straw.

CAUTION.

"To be, or not to be, that is the question! Whether 'tis nobler in the mind to suffer The slings and arrows of outrageous opposition, Or by taking up arms against a sea of printing ink, And opposing, end them?"

THE proprietor of the Argus takes occasion in advertising his Bindery to indulge in an uncalculated fling about a "sort of concern," which is hoping "to delude the public." As I have opened a Bindery on my own account, the inference is that if the public bring their binding to me, they are in no danger of being defrauded. For two years I have worked for Mr. Parsons, and he has taken great pains to satisfy the public I was the "best Binder in America," as the columns of the Argus will testify. Has he been all that time "deluding the public?" If I have been engaged in a fraud, he has been the principal. But I refer to my work during that time, evidence that there has been no fraud practiced.

Having served a long apprenticeship at the Bindery business, I have resumed business here on my own account, and I know of nothing which prevents me from following a legitimate and lawful calling for my support. I shall endeavor by good work and attention to my business to give public satisfaction.
