Manufacture of Maple Sugar.

The first great requisite is to have all the vessels perfectly clean. Strict cleanliness should be observed throughout the whole process. Tin vessels are better than wood for this reason. If properly washed, they can never impart sourness to the sap. Made large enough to hold nine quarts each, they would cost about $35 per hundred, and six quart pails cost $30 per hundred. They may be made square or round, but the latter are better to clean and keep in shape. They should be largest at the top, so as to pack away in nests when not in use. The top should be strongly wired, like a tin pan, and a hole made under the wire enables it to hang on a nail driven into the tree, securing it thus from swine and other animals, and preventing the sap from being blown away by the wind. Old horse-shoe nails straightened and shapened, are the best.

The best spouts are made of thick tinned iron. When the vessel are hung as above described on nails, the spouts need not be more than three inches long. They should be widest where they enter the tree. After the sheet tin is cut up to the proper size, the concave shape is given to them by placing them between a convex and concave piece of wood and giving them a brisk blow with a mallet. Made sharp at the wide end, they are easily driven into the tree.

Never allow the sap to stand in the pails twenty-four hours—the fresher it is when boiled the purer will be the sugar. While boiling large quantities should not be poured in at a time, as that will stop it, and make irregular work; but a reservoir should be placed above the boiler, from which the sap may be drawn in a stream through a faucet, just fast enough to supply the evaporation. A little practice will enable the operator to judge how large this stream should be. Two boilers are better than one if the fire is made to pass from one to the other—the first or hottest being chiefly for boiling down to syrup, the second or coldest for heating the sap and doing the first evaporating. The faucet of fresh sap runs into the first, and a pipe or syphon, with faucet conveyed it to the second.

Kettles are poor boilers—they waste fuel and make poor sugar. Shallow sheet-iron pans are much better. They may be kept cleaner, they evaporate more rapidly, make finer sugar and effect a greater saving of heat. In all cases, should be so set that a thin sheet of flame, two inches thick, under a boiler, is as good as a foot thick—the same amount may therefore be spread over six times the surface, and consequently be about six times more economical.

We have some good home-made pans, used for boiling sorghum successfully, made by nailing good thick sheet-iron to plank, so that the sheet-iron formed the bottom and ends, and the plank the side—the sheet-iron was secured to the plank by two rows of closely driven nails. The pans were about eight feet long, and four wide, and six inches deep. They would be cheap, and very good for making maple sugar. The fire place should of course be little narrower than these pans. The chimney should be high enough to cause a good draught.

To make good syrup, the sap must be reduced to one twentieth or one thirtieth of its bulk. The syrup is then strained through flannel, and placed aside to cool and settle twelve or twenty-four hours. Then return it to the pan, and to every gallon add and stir a beaten egg and a gill of milk to clarify it, keeping it carefully from boiling till the sum has risen and has been skimmed off. Then boil it carefully until it will harden, which may be known by dropping some from a spoon into cold water. When this takes place, the liquid sugar may then be poured into proper vessels, and the cakes placed in a box to drain. To make the sugar perfectly white, lay a few thicknesses of flannel on the top of the cakes while it is draining, these flannels to be wet and washed daily with cold water—they will thus absorb and wash out the coloring matter.

A hundred good sugar maple trees will usually make in a season, from two to three hundred pounds of sugar, if well managed; and if every precaution is observed to ensure cleanliness, prevent souring, boil speedily and without burning, and to clarify properly, a larger quantity of sugar will be made, it will be more saleable, and command a higher price; or if intended for home use, the smiles of the farmer's wife, when she sees such a beautiful article make its appearance, will more than repay him for all the pains he has taken to secure such excellent success.—Country Gentleman.

GET YOUR SEED FOR SPRING.—The World well remarks:—"One of the most important matters is the quality of seeds of all kinds for farm and garden, and of the trees and vines which are to be planted. Without careful selection in these matters, all the preparations for grain and fruits and vegetables are lessened in value. As surely as like produces like, produces like, so certainly will not poor seed produce good crops in fruits, roots and grain. See, then, instantly, to these matters, if you have not already arranged for supplies of the best quality which labor and expense can procure; and when you have to buy, buy only from persons of well-known character in the cultivation of such articles as you may desire for planting."

A Hint or Two.—To keep ice from windows, take an ordinary paint-brush or sponge, and rub over the glass once or twice a day a little alcohol, and it will keep the glass as free from ice as in the middle of summer; and it will also give as good a polish as can be got in any other way.

Isinglass is a most delicate starch for muslins. When boiling common starch, sprinkle in a little fine salt; it will prevent its sticking.

For fruit and wine stains, mix two teaspoonsfuls of water and one of spirit of salt, and let the stained part lie in this for two minutes; then rinse in cold water, or wet the stain with hartshorn.

Grape vines may be trimmed at any time during the winter. It is usually advised to trim in February. Done before the first week in March, vines will seldom bleed badly. It is not well to trim after the last of February, unless the ground is deeply covered with snow.

Stupid people may eat, but shouldn't talk. Their mouths will do well enough as basins of deposit, but not of issue.
