The best mode of proceeding in relation to corn is to plow very deeply in the first instance, preparatory to the reception of the seed, and to keep the surface soil light and loose in the after culture. Everybody knows that while corn strikes its roots to a great deapth, whenever the nature of the soil will admit of so doing, its lateral roots spread out in a perfect net-work between the rows. Now the most serious matter to be guarded against in raising corn are the droughts that prevail frequently at or near mid summer, and washing rains when the corn is planted on hillsides. Deep plowing protects the plant in a very great degree from the effects of drought, by stirring up moisture below the point of rapid evaporation. In the case of heavy rains it has also the advantage of permitting the water to percolate through the soil instead of holding it in solution, as is the case with shallow plowing on an under soil, which by constant and slovenly practice becomes of the nature of hard pan If, then, the soil has been deeply stirred in the first instance, surface tillage is the only thing needed in the after culture. We most decidedly object to plowing or cultivating the land to a considerable depth after the growth of the corn is well advanced, because this cannot be done without inflicting serious injury to the great mass of fibrous roots which extend laterally but a few inches below the surface, and which are constantly extending themselves in search of fresh food throughout the whole period of growth. The after culture should in no instance be of nature to interfere with the free ramification of these delicate roots, for by larcerating them we cut off just so many mouths as we cut off fibres, and thus deprive the plant of that amount of nourishment which these mouths would otherwise have furnished. The rule, then, is deep and thoro' plowing before planting, tolerably deep cultivation before the roots begin to extend to any great distance from the stalk, and shallow stirring subsequently. It is customary with some farmers to run a light harrow over the corn as the tender blade makes its appearance above the surface, and the practice is a good one in loams and in all soils of a light texture. But where the soil contains a preponderence of clay, and is apt to bake or form a crust after a rain, the danger is that in breaking up the clod the young shoot will suffer injury. In such eases it is much better to use the hoe in loosening the compact earth about the place, and to let the shovel plow and the cultivator loosen the intervals between the roots both ways. Frequently stirring of the soil is absolutely necessary from the time the plant appears above the ground until harvest suspends, perhaps temporarily, perhaps entirely, the work of after culture. - Rural Register.

TO CURE A HORSE THAT KICKS IN THE STA-BLE -Place a plank, securely fastened, not more than two inches above his hips across the stall, and the horse will soon get sick of trying to kick, for kick he cannot. If he is an inveterate kicker, and will kick without the plank to prevent him, the "Subscriber" will find it much cheaper to keep the preventative in opgration than to build new stalls.

The following came under my notice years ago : "The horse was a fine full-blooded animal, and kicked everything moving in the stable. After trying every remedy without effect, a strong swing was hung a short distance behind him as he stood in the stall, and the seat being well padded so as not to injure him. When all was ready, the swing was set in motion, which of course, immediately attracted his attention, and he began to kick and strike at it, and when it came toward him, he HATS AND CAPS, would kick until he got his hind foot snugly fixed on the seat of the swing. Here the poor animal remained until he was thoroughly tired, when he was released. That horse never kicked after."

This may be done every year, or once in two years. This I accidentially discovered moving the earth from a peach tree 6 or 8 inches in diameter, much injured by the worms, the bark all off, and the wood badly eaten away. Having a jar of sulphur by me emptied the contents, from half a pound to a pound, in the opening made around the tree, to clean out the worms. The earth was replaced, with slim hopes of the tree recovering; but during the summer the foliage assumed a deep rich green, and the tree grew finely. On removing the earth in the following Prompt action is necessary. Gov. THE proprietor of the Argus takes or casion in advertising his Bindery to indulge in an uncalled for fling about a "sort of a concern," which is hoping "to delude the public." As I have opened a Bindery on my own account, the inference is that if the public bring their binding to me, they are in no danger of being defrauded. For two years I have worked for Mr. Parsons, and he has taken great painst satisfy the public I was the "best Binder in America," as the columns of the Argus wil testify. Has he been all that time "deluding the public?" If I have been engaged in a fraud, he has been the principal. But I refer to my work during that time a evidence that there has been no fraud practiced.

Having served a long apprenticeship at the Bindery business, I have resumed business here on my own account, as I know of nothing which prevents me from following a legitimate and bawful calling for my support.—I shall endeavor by good work and attention to my business to give public satisfaction. ess to give public satisfaction.
