The following communication, over the eognomen of "Spectator," written under date of January 14th, we clip from the Harrisburg

Daily Telegraph :] The citizens of Pennsylvania have for many years been lauding the far West as the "promised land." There they have sent their treas ures and their population, and by so doing have built up new States almost equal to the old. That the new States are good no one denies; but that they are better in any point of view than Pennsylvania is questionable. If we had been satisfied with our own State for the last forty years, we would now be indeed a great State.

I do not intend to dwell on our great mineral resources, but I would like to call the attention of your readers to our great agricultural advantages, and in doing this I will refer principally to the northern counties of the State. It is a certain fact that one side of The citizens of the counties bordering on the Maryland line and the citizens of counties bordering on New York know but little of each other. The southern counties of the State were settled first, and were flourishing agricultural regions, while those of the north were almost a wilderness; but the last forty years has made a great change, and the northern counties are surpassing those of the south in population; and agriculture is in progress fully equal to the increase of population.

I will now state that I think Bradford county one of the best, if not the very best, in the State. I speak of agricultural advantages. I am aware that this assertion will require some proof. In proof I will state some statistics; but before doing so, it will be but just to say that the soil of Bradford county is all rich, and as far as known inexhaustible. One railroad passes through the county and one passes on the border line, and the Pennsylvania canal, opening a communication from the Chesapeake Bay to Lake Erie, passes through the centre of Bradford county. I will now make a few comparisons with other counties, beginning with Adams:

In 1820 Adams county had a population of	28,01
Increase in 40 years. In 1820 Bradford had a population of. In 1860
Increase in 40 years	ount county, and that in 1860 Bradford had a population of 20,723 more than Adams. Some will be ready to say, try a larger and a richer county, and I will do so. Franklin county, also adjoining Maryland, is a very rich and fine agricultural county. I will compare Franklin and Bradford :

In 1820 Franklin had a population of. 31,192 In 1860. 42,128 Increase in 40 years...... 10,936 In this comparison Bradford county started 19,638 behind, and came out 6,607 ahead. I consider Franklin county one of the best southern counties in the State, in an agricultural point of view, and when a comparison with that county places the progressive improvement of Bradford so far ahead, I am at a loss to find any southern county to compare with. I would willingly compare with Lancaster, but she has one large city and a great number of large tows, so that a comparison with Lancaster in population would be far from showing the agricultural increase. Bradford county has no town with more than 2,000 inhabitants and she has few villages. Her population is almost entirely rural. Lancaster county is rich and a great county in every sense of the word, but her agricultural population has not increased equal to that of Bradford :

In 1820 Lancaster county had a population of...

Lancaster in forty years increased 10,798 more than Bradford county; but Bradford has increased as much as Lancaster county without the city. In 1820 Lancaster county had more than six times the population of Bradford county, while in 1860 she has not three time as many. Bradford has a percentage increase in population far above Lancas-

I will next compare with Chester county, that good old county foremost in all good works, a leader in agriculture and manufactures, and for a long time a leader in education and refinement. Her citizens have been famous for their industry and intelligence, and I would always speak of Chester county with respect; but Bradford will bear comparison with Chester ; not even shrinking from an examination in educational matters:

٠	Increase in 40 years
	Bradford has increased in population in forty years 7,158 more than the increase of Ches ter county in the same time. In 1820 Chester county had nearly four times the population of Bradford, and in 1860 she has only about one-half to one. This has been a rapid gain for young Bradford. Before closing 1 will make a comparison with York county: In 1820 York county had a population of. 38,759

In 1860 68 200 68,200

Bradford increased in forty years 7,740 more than the increase of York in the same time. In 1850 Bradford had the most farms of any county in the State, Lancaster excepted. In agriculture Bradford stands well; in population she is not exceeded in any agricultural counties excepting Bucks, Montgomery, West moreland and York, and what is better than all, she is second to none in her educational matters. Highland, Bradford Co., Pa.

CHAPPED HANDS .- The following is said to be a sure receipe for the cure of chapped hands -Dissolve three cents' worth of clarified beeswax in three cents' worth of pure sweet oil, by heating over a moderate fire. Apply at night before retiring. If desirable it can be seented.

A Swiss Sour .- Boil three pounds of potatoes, mash them well, and add slowly some good broth, sufficient for the tureen. Let these boil together, then add some spinach, a little parsley, lemon, thyme, and sage, all chopped very fine. Boil together five minutes ; pepper and salt to taste. Just before taking it off the fire to serve, add two well beaten eggs.

PROFITABLE .- To look well the comfort of your stock. It pays well.
