An arrow has been sped from the unseen hand of the into the midst of our brotherhood, and observed a lodgment in a shining mark—our worthy ther, Geo. Scorr, has been laid low by its fatal a. The precursor of his fall was a disease next the tardiness of its progress and the certainty of fatality to that of intemperance: but with the sked difference, that consumption destroyes not mind or the soul while intemperance preys upboth. Our brothers disease made no innovation at that bright intellect inherited by him, from a warming the soul warmi n both. Our brothers disease made no innovation pon that bright intellect inherited by him, from a fited mother, whose native genius illuminated and formed the pages of poetry, and secured to her an amortal fame. As a descendant of the Scott's in the Kinney's, the convergent rays of intellectal brilliancy could not fail to centre in him. But, brethren, his rare talents were not all his tractions. His moral virtues and social qualities are passports to the friendly confidence of us all, he fervent devotion of his filial affection to the emory of his sainted mother was noted by his squent visits to her revered grave; by the side of hich he will now rest in close but unheeding proxity.
