BARN-YARD MANURE.

The general practice of farmers throughout the country, of pitching the manure from their stables and cow sheds into the open barn-yard, exposed to the rains, which wash more or less of its soluble inorganic constituents, besides subjecting it to the rays of the sun, causing an immense loss by evaporation, and also allowing the organic gases, carbonic acid, ammonia, etc., which are generated during decomposition or fermentation, to escape, is a most negligent and careless way of doing things, and opposed to all true economy, for he loses the most valuable part of his manures. Near my friend's barn is a long shed, constructed of common boards. The manure from the stables and cow sheds is removed to this shed every morning. When five or six inches in thickness a layer of pond mud or manure is added to the mass. This prevents the escape of any gases that may be liberated during decomposition, by absorbing and retaining them. The whole heap consists of alternate layers of barnyard manure and pond mud. The stalls are so constructed that the liquid drainage passes into a deep recess made on purpose, along side of the manure heap, and from there it is thrown over the compost once and sometimes twice a week. In case the liquids from the stable and sheds are insufficient, the requisite quantity is added from a large cistern near the shed. The liquid prevents all fire-fanging or burning of the manure, causing the labor of forking over to be entirely dispensed with; this alone is quite a item saved. During my visit in the spring I had a chance to witness the appearance of the manure, as it was carted out from the shed, and it looked to me more like rotten cheese than barn-yard manure. Every particle seemed to have thoroughly rotted, and not a vestige of straw could be discerned in the entire heap.

EARLY POTATOES.

Every family—in the country at least—should have them plentifully by the first of August, and by taking some pains may begin to use them by the Fourth of July. The first thing to be considered is the soil. It should be a comparatively dry and sandy soil, rather than a wet, black loam. A fresh or new soil is greatly preferable, one covered with grass, or which is still being scrubbed out, sweet fern, blackberry and huckleberry bushes. Such a soil, when well ploughed and harrowed, will be light, and will abound with the alkalies and alkaloids earths that the potato requires. The situation selected should be an open but a warm one—along the side of an old fence or wall, where bushes have been growing for half a century, or less, and exposed to the morning sun. On such a soil and in such a situation the plants will start early and come to maturity rapidly; and if the variety planted be a good one, the tubers grown will have a sweet and agreeable flavor. Some of the varieties used for early planting are the Jackson White, White Chenango, which come quite early, the Early Blue, and others. Barr says the Ash-leaved Kidney is one of the earliest varieties, and that the Early Blue is one of the earliest of the garden potatoes, of fine quality, and one of the best for forcing for early crops. If the ground was not prepared last fall, it should be made ready as soon as the frost is out, so that it can be plowed six inches deep, and the potatoes planted.

In order to facilitate the crop some persons set a barrel of seed by the kitchen stove about the middle of March, where they remain until sprouts have started half an inch in length. In this case the top of the potatoes must be covered with loam or a cloth to keep out the light. Others lay a bushel or two of seed upon grass ground, in some warm spot, and cover them with horse manure sufficiently dry to keep them warm. They will sprout readily in this condition if they are kept moist and warm, and can be got at to plant more easily than from a barrel. Others still, who only require a few, start them in hot beds.

SALT FOR STOCK.

Having noticed an article occasionally in the Farmer on the subject of salting stock, and in the January number an extract from an article in the Germantown Telegraph, advising farmers not to give salt to stock, I wish to say a word on the subject. 1st. We should consult the natural taste of the animal. If salt be not healthy, and even necessary, how is it that they so crave it? Deer and buffaloes, in a wild state, go long distances for it. Man in all countries uses it. If not really required by their systems, why do such animals so universally seek it? 2d. Universal practice. Men always use it when it can be obtained. They are invariably given it to their cattle. Is it possible a practice so general, and coming down to us from the remotest times, can have no foundation in the necessities of the animals themselves. 3d. My own limited observation and experience. I find my sheep do not eat as well when they are without salt as they do when they have a regular supply. I have a salt-box in my sheep shed, in which I aim always to keep salt. I wish all my stock were as steadily and constantly supplied with it. If the salt is all eaten up, the sheep soon tell me of it. And I think this is particularly needed when they are on grass. If I observe any of the sheep scouring, I add a little wood ashes to the salt, mixing them carefully, and I never fail to cure the sheep at once. I have a cow also that calls for her salt as surely as she calls for her feed. If I am in haste to put flesh on a horse, I give him an extra quantity of salt, and can always perceive the increase of appetite, and consequent increase of flesh.

But I have already occupied too much space. I wish other farmers would give us the benefit of their experience in this matter. J. P. WATERHOUSE.—Germantown Farmer. FARMERS' PAINT.—Farmers will find the following profitable for horse or fence paint: Skim milk, two quarts; fresh slacked lime, eight ounces; linseed oil, six ounces; white Burgundy pitch, two ounces; Spanish white, three pounds. The lime is to be slacked in water, exposed to the air, and then mixed with about one-fourth of the milk; the oil, in which the pitch is dissolved, to be added, a little at a time, then the rest of the milk and afterwards the Spanish white. This is sufficient for seven yards, two coats. This is for a white paint. If desirable, any other color may be produced; thus, if a cream color is desired, in place of part of Spanish white, use the ochre alone.—Working Farmer.

WATER-PROOF GLUE.—Render glue perfectly soft, but not liquid, in cold water. Then dissolve it by a gentle heat in linseed oil. It dries almost immediately, and water will not affect it. Why is a spunter like a real estate dealer? Because she prefers a double lot to a single one. Why is a cow's tail like a swan's bosom? Because it grows down.
