FURNITURE WARE-ROOMS .- We call the atention of our readers, and particularly of those lesiring to purchase Furniture, to the advertisement of J. O. Frost. He has purchased the large stock of C. Wells, and added to it a large assortment from the best manufactories of the East. Mr. FROST proposes to keep on hand a style of Furniure adapted to the wants of the country. His failities for manufacturing are ample, and from his vell-known reputation as a fair business man, we have no doubt that the public will do well to give him a call.

THE LADIES' FRIEND .- Another beautiful teel engraving opens the March number of this averite periodical, just received. The engraving death afforded another illustration of the great death afforded another illustration of t "Oh, I see them sinking, sinking slowly, Those olden dreams so pure and holy."

The design and execution of this engraving are exquisite. The Steel Fashion Plate of this month is double one, and, as usual, admirably engraved. We need hardly to allude to the usual number of od-engravings, devoted to the illustration of the shions, &c. DIED. CAMP.—In Herrick, Feb. 25th, Horatio N. Camp, son of H. W. Camp, aged twenty-seven years. In the early morn of our present national strug gle, he volunteered and was for a time in his country's service; but the hardships of war were more than his frail constitution could endure. He received his discharge and returned to his home, but with the shafts of disease fastened upon his vitals, and for three years he slowly withered under the wasting power of consumption. We all love the virtuous, magnanimous characters while with us, but such ones are rarely appreciated fully till seen, like birds of gilded plumage, with spread wings passing away. When gone we appreciate their worth, and only then realize fully the greatness of our own loss. Horatio was known but to be loved. To be his acquaintance was to be his friend.-Though smitten down in the morn of his years, the truth "that life is long which answers life's end." "We live in deeds not years; in thoughts, not breaths; in feelings, not in figures on a dial."

POLHEMUS.—In Milan, Nov. 16, 1864, of enlargement of the Liver, L. V. D. Polhemus, of Somerville, Somerset County, N. Y. A NOBLE SOLDIER.

A MOBLE SOLDIER.

Among the costly sacrifices the nation has cost, but few have exceeded the one we are about to chronicle. The American people have yet to learn the worth and importance of the rank and file, the private soldiery of the noble Union army. Of the noble deeds and heroic sufferings of many of whom it might be truly said, as of the flower of the desert, "Born to blush unseen, and waste its fragrence on the desert air." Frank Morgan, the subject of this brief memoir, was the only son of Page and Mark Morgan, residents of East Troy, Bradford county, Pa. He was born in Pittsford, Vt., Sept. 3d, 1840. His early years gave promise of the future soldier, and self sacrificing patriot. In the early part of the war, it was his pride to unfurl from his chamber window a beautifulfag his mother's hands had made. When the contest grew farious over the disastrous and bloody fields of Bull Run, and the President sent forth the call for 200,000 volunteeers, Frank Morgan was found among the warder. Run, and the President sent forth the call for 200, -000 volunteeers, Frank Morgan was found among the number. The endearments of home, wealth, and social position, could not hold him, the fires of a noble patriotism burned too intensely. On that memorable day in American history, the 4th of July, 1861, he enlisted in company F, Captain Mitchell, 11th Penn'a. Cavalry, commanded first by Col. Harland, and afterwards by Col. Spear. He was in eleven battles and skirmishes, in all of which he acted well his part, as the following testimonial from his brave comrades in arms will fully establish. Richmond and Danville Rail Road, about 30 miles south of Richmond. His 1st Lieutenant says of him, "he was captured whils fighting nobly on foot, having been dismounted, while his comrades were compelled to retire;" and he further adds, "this was one of the most extensive and successful raids of the war." He was taken to Richmond, thence to Andersonville, thence to Savannah with the promise of exchange, and from then to Millen, Ga., where he died Nov. 13, 1864, of exposure and storyalion, unsheltered from sun and storyal nothpromise of exchange, and from then to Millen, Ga., where he died Nov. 13, 1864, of exposure and starvation, unsheltered from sun and storm, another victim of rebel barbarism and cruelty. Thus died a lad af twenty summers, leaving a happy home of comfort and plenty to yield up his young life, a martyr on the altar of country and liberty. He died, as we learn from a fellow sufferer, in the faith of the gospel of Christ, in the expressed hope of a blessed re-union with parents and friends, in that happy land beyond the storm of battle and the reach of rebel cruelty, of which comforting expectation we believe he will not be disappointed, for his mother has long been a christian, and his father, and adopted sister, and many of his young friends have since enlisted under the bunner of the Cross. His funeral was attended by a large concourse of citizens and friends who honor his memory, and deeply sympathize with his parents in their sore bereavement. Over the pulpit was spread the flag of our country his mother's hands had wrought, and which it was the joy of his young heart to fling to the breeze. May his life and noble deeds be largely emulated by the young men of our land, and may the dear old flag soon wave in undisputed triumph over the nations broad domain.

The following beautiful tribute was sent his bereaved parents by the surviving members of his commany.

Since the day Frank first joined this company, ("F.") until the hour of his capture, he was beloved by both officers and men, and was recognized by all as a young man of sterling worth and integrity, so much so that he was universally known as "Honest Frank." He possessed all the qualities of a good, faithful soldier, cool and considerate in the hour of danger, ready to execute any order, even though his life might be the forfeit. His deportment at all times, was such as to win the der, even though his life might be the forfeit. His deportment at all times, was such as to win the admiration of every good soldier, and his deeds were truly worthy of emulation. We had all learned to love him, and he was not one too value lightly, the esteem of a friend.

But he has gone! and we may not recall him, neither would we, for is not his present state much better than ours? He has fallen in a glorious cause, has added one more name to the already overwhelming list of mertyred heroes who have fallen upon the altar of our country; and who shall say, that his name is not as worthy of glory—his memory of our most grateful thoughts—as that of an ELISWORTH, a REYNOLDS, a MANSFIELD, or a STRONG, each of whom fell at the head of their forces, while manfully battling for the national existence?

Think of him as the hero, and let your heart beat with honest pride for your noble boy, who fell in the defence of the right! and may the sacrifice be not vain, but 'glorious in its fast ripening fruits.

We remain, with high respects,
Your obedient servants.
