CULTIVATION OF BUCKWHEAT.

When buckwheat is so wed in the spring seed should be sowed, so that the hottest weather will have passed, by the time the buckwheat is in full bloom. Cool weather or at least cool nights are quite as essen-tial to a good crop of buckwheat, as hot days and nights are for Indian corn. The days and nights are for Indian corn. The point to be aimed at in every locality is, to defer sowing as long as possible and allow it sufficient time to mature before an early frost will destroy the crop. This period oc-curs at different times in different localities. In the latitude of Central and Western New York, the proper time for seeding is about the first of July. We have known buckwheat sowed as late as the 16th of July, which produced a bountiful crop; but in that latitude there is a great risk on account of the frost, if it is not sowed by account of the frost, if it is not sowed by greatest gentleness, it may be taugh the 10th of July. Our most successful far-travel by the side of its dam, whereve their buckwheat nut in as soon as the fourth mers in this latitude, calculate to have their buckwheat put in as soon as the fourth of July; and in some seasons, even when sowed at that time, frost appears so early in the fall as to almost destroy the entire crop. In some localities it may be sowed the latter part of July, and escape frost. If the soil where it is sowed be well pul-verized so that it will vegetate immediately, and if the grain is put in by the fourth of July or even by the tenth, a bountiful crop may be expected. When the ground is plowed but once for a crop of buckwheat where the soil is heavy, it is often so dry and hard, and breaks up in such large and hard, and breaks up in such large lumps and clods, that many farmers in waiting for rain to moisten the soil previ-ous to plowing, are compelled to defer seeding until it is too late. But if the soil be plowed in the spring, it will not become dry and hard by the time it is to be plowed the second time, but will be moist and mel-low: and the grain will vegetate soon. lumps and clods, that many farmers in low;; and the grain will vegetate soon. Every intelligent farmer who is located on a heavy soil, that is apt to plow up lumpy, understands the importance of plow-ing it when it is just moist enough ty turn up mellow. Buckwheat can not be expec-ted to vegetate in time, and flourish luxur. ted to vegetate in time, and flourish luxuriantly, and yield a renumerating crop when I gave 4 drops more, and the night fol the soil is a mass of dry lumps .-- American Agriculturist.
