THE RECONSTRUCTION REPORT. The report of the joint committee on Re construction, and the ratification of the vital feature of the report by the decisive vote of the House, present the great problem of restoration to the country in a tanwoodland and several dwellings. About four gible form. The time is past now when the purpose of Congress can be misrepresented by those who seek to serve the cause of traitors. After patiently investigating the condition of the rebellious States-taking the testimony of leading rebels and loyalists in those States, the committee united every Republican on the amendments of the constitution and the bills reported, and they declare to the nation and to the world, in substance if not in form, the position of the Union party on the restoration of the rebel States to fellow-fully coincide with the entire report of the committee. Some would liberalize the third amendment and thus leave treason practically without a penalty; others would make the disfranchisement cease only with the death of those who had waged war against the government, and others would demand that the loyal men of the South, without regard to color or condition, be clothed with the ballot as a measure of justice alike to themselves and to the country. But while there is great diversity of opinion as to the details of the proper policy of reconstruction, we believe that the Union men will unite cordially and carnestly in supporting any measure that may be accepted by the Union men of Congress. What the loyal men of the nation most desire is to have some definite policy, not wholly dictated by traitors, that Gen. Mitchell's famous "railroad expedition," who can be made the fixed and settled policy of the government. Considering that the President seems to have no higher ambition than to clothe treason with honors and power, it is well for the Union party to look to practical results and not sacrifice all by refusing what can be attained. It is manifest that any penalty for treason and any security against renewed discord and war, must be achieved over the head and in defiance of the power and patronage of the President, who reached his position by the suffrages of the millions of loval people whose convictions he now so fiercely antagonizes, and Congress must therefore calculate well its position and make the future safe by securing all that the present

> THE NATIONAL FINANCES .- The receipts into the United States Treasury for the nine months of the fiscal year ending April

The new tax law will probably diminish receipts from several sources for the next ear; but there will be new taxes, (such as the tax on Cotton,) and the Southern States will yrobably yield considerable revenue; so that the receipts for the year commencing July 1st, 1866, will not in all probably be and others. The following programme was one sort of Republicans for another-to less than the total for the current year.

The aggregate being thus large it seems reasonable to hope that there will be sufficient margin to permit a large reduction of the public debt. We have now reached the maximum of that debt; and having extinguished the floating claims that have accumulated since the war closed, the demands upon the Treasury will be confined hereafter to the interest on the public debt and the ordinary expenses of the govern ment. The structure was erected in the rear of Mrs. Wachter's Hotel, Broadway, and was used as a rear entrance to that hotel from Church street, a store house. &c. The wall was a twelveinch one, and was some twenty feet high. The track terminated within a few inche of it. As the train backed down, the platform of the rear coach struck the wall with such force as to knock a hole through it.

when, of course, the whole structure fell Mrs. Wachter and a domestic were at the time engaged inside, washing some clothes. Peter Myers, the bartender, a daughter and son or Mrs. Wachter, and a boy named John Wagoner were in the centre of the yard at the time. The bar-tender heard the crash and observed the falling wall. With considerable presence of mind, he immediately thrust the females back towards the door, thus saving them from serious injury. The two boys were covered up in the ruins, and both were badly hurt, young Wachter was badly cut and about the head and body.
