The fences cost much less on a small farm than on a large one, and there is less care and anxiety connected with it. With thorough cultivation, we believe the same amount of grass, grain and fruit can be grown, and the same amount of stock kept on fifty acres, for which one hundred are now required. Were you to examine the first one hundred horses you meet that have been shod for several years, you would scarcely find the provent point would scarcely find one that has a natural, well-shaped hoof. A friend brought me for examination, a beantiful, spirited animal, that, without perceptible canse, became so lame as to be nearly useless. The owner feared a form der. On examination I found the farrier had, by repeated close paring and rasping, nearly ruined the beast. The enamel of the hoof had been broken, and fine dirt was ir-ritating the "quick." The bottom of the boof had been broken, and fine dirt was ir-ritating the "quick." The bottom of the boof had been broken, and fine dirt was ir-ritating the "quick." The bottom of the sight of immediate rain or wet weather, they hoot had been shaved so thin that a light blow between the frog and toe made the animal cringe with pain. Another instance of mal-practice that came under my notice was of a horse that had a club foot, caused by improper side-clipping. This horse had by improper side-clipping. This horse had by nature an uncommonly broad hoof, and to remedy the defect the farrier had made extensive inroads on the sides, and nature, to restore the equilibrium, and reconstruct the missing part, contracted the toe and bulged the sides above where they had been clipped, producing thus a great de-formity. Almost universally, where lame-ness occurs from flat foot, it is occasioned by improper shoeing. Where this defect exists, the heel should never be pared, and the shoe should be made stiff enough to prevent hard pressure on the heel, and it is sometimes advisable to place the heel-cork on one side of the shoe. Very bad cases have been remedied by putting on a round been clipped, producing thus a great deshoe, with leather or rubber between the shoe and hoof. If too many nails are inser-ted, the natural expansion of the hoof is prevented, and disease or defermine or green grass, mhich is preferable to the preferable to the start of the st ted, the natural expansion of the hoof is prevented, and disease or deformity must ensue; more than five nails in a shoe can never be needed, unless it be to hide clum-sy fitting.
