Union State Ticket. FOR GOVERNOR, GEN. JOHN W. GEARY, OF WESTMORELAND COUNTY. EUROPEAN WAR.

A war in Europe seems inevitable, and already the armies of the contending parties are taking position on the vulnerable surprised by the savages, one only making his es- points on, or leading to, the disputed territories.

The question with the American reader s, "What is the direct, or immediate cause of this war?" And while it is quite visible that territorial aggrandisement, or the ambitious projects of the ruling sovereigns of Europe, is alone the real cause of the war, yet each side has so befogged the question with belabored arguments, that nost people as remote as we, are at a loss to determine what Europe is going to war for. We now sit down to illustrate this, and we do not know that we shall be suc-

It will be remembered, that a few years ago Prussia and Austria had a private quarrel about the sovereignty of the Dutchies of Schleswig and Holstein, the southappears in a Montreal newspaper proposing Admiral Farragut as a candidate for President of the ritory of Denmark. These Duchies give United States. The card quotes William IV. of the holder, or ruling sovereign, a vote in England as a precedent for the elevation of a sailor the great German Diet, and this, beside being no inconsiderable provinces in themselves gives importance to their possession. For the political affairs of the German states being under the control of the Diet. a vote there is often a question of great magnitude. In the European wars against Napoleon Bonaparte, Denmark was forced to unite her fortunes with the latter, and then when he was conquered, the Allied en the field with immense accessions to his Powers had no mercy on poor, weak Den-standard. mark, and her territory was cut up to suit Prussia and Austria, and hence it came that Schleswig and Holstein, part of Den- parations are on foot. mark, is he'd in sovereignty by these two powers; but by the inter-marriages and deaths of the reigning Dukes, the respective titles of the sovereigns became complicated, and the quarrel of a few years ago, alluded to above, ensued.

Now, this private quarrel between Austria and Prussia, has set all the monarchs of Europe at loggerheads, and this has come about in this wise .

Prussia, fearing that she would be unable to fight Austria alone successfully, hatches up a project to secure the assistprinciple of territorial compensation. The terms of the treaties said to exist between -In many towns in Mississippi the freed- these three Powers, treaties which have not en who are able to get along without assistance | yet been openly avowed, are supposed to include the acquisition of Venetia by Italy of the left bank of the Rhine by France, mark. Thus arranged the combatants are about equal, and the con test promises to be one of great magnitude and fierceness. Indeed, this very fact, has compelled hesitation. The vastness of the fight as thus arranged, the ruin that it must Tribune were said to foot up $160,000, Mr. Cowles entail, and the absence of a sufficiently justifying cause, may yet sober and rationalize those controlling the interests of Eu-

Hence his plans for the aggrandizement of Prussia meet with no sympathy even from Prussians, while they are heartily detested in every other part of Germany. The intensity of this feeling is apparent from the following quotation:

We shall never be in repose as long as Austria and Prussia are equal in force. The interest of Germany, therefore, demands imperiously the destruction of one of these two great Powers. Then comes the question which of the two should be sacrificed. Austria is a political necessity for Germany and for Europe, while the existence of Prussia has no other motive than the dynastic interests of the family of Hoharzeller. rests of the family of Hohanzoller terests of the family of Hohenzollern. To Europe, at present, it is a matter of utter indifference whether Prussia should be replaced or not by three or four States of Secondary rank, as the political equilibrium would in nowise be disturbed. If Prussia should disappear from the map of Europe, not the least hiatus would be perceived, nor the smallest interest be injuriously effected. When therefore, the question arises as to which of the two great German Powers should be effaced from the map of Europe, the interest of Germany interests of Germany inthe map of Europe, the interest of Germany in-contestibly indicates Prussia, and demands her

If we look into Italy, we shall be at onc struck with the different spirit that animates the people. From one end of the kingdom to the other, all is enthusiasm and eagerness. Volunteers flock by thousands to the army, and contributions of money flow in one incessant stream into the na tional treasury. It is the general opinion in Europe that Italy will make a fight for Venetia, even if she must fight alone. Says

M. Emile de Girardin, in La Liberte: Italy has gone too far-she must fight. This is not the moment to make critical observations, more or less just, on the manner in which the negotiatio have been conducted by Gen. THE FIRST BATTLE OF THE EUROPEAN WAR. The details of the battle are given with great clearness in the brief official dispatches from the headquarters of the Italian and Austrian armies. It appears from these dispatches that the Italians, under the immediate command of their King, crossed the Mincio, near Goito, on the morning of June 23, and drove in the Austrian outposts. On the morning of the 24th the First Corps of the Italian army attacked the Austrian positions near Peschiera with great spirit, but was overwhelmed by a superior force and compelled to retreat be fore the Second and Third Corps could come to its assistance. The Italians occupied a strong position at Custozza, which was taken by assault, the Italians losing heavily. Finding themselves outnumbered, the Italians recrossed the Mincio on the 25th, unpursued by the Austrians.
