There is more in regular- all kinds of vegetation in a state of decay. ity in tending a horse, than many persons have dreamed. Most men permit their hor-fully preserved for use. ses to drink at every opportunity; but it is hazardous for horses to drink much cold water when they are warm and perspiring, as I have known them to die from drinking when heated. I do not see why the same plan of feed. ing horses could not more generally be adopted with proportional advantages, if feeding cattle; but perhaps there is in the minds of many farmers, the objection that such a manner of feeding would necessiate more work and time, so as to counterbalance all profit derived from its adoption. There is, indeed, soundness in this objection, and I can hope for its removal only as the era of machinery advances. In England, many farmers have no such hinderance, as they employ steam engines on large farms-and would it not be more advantageous for American farmers to use steam more than they do? They could then with ease cut the fodder, turnips and other roots; thrash their grain; unload their hay by the aid of the horse-pitchfork ; irrigate their land, and employ it in many other ways.-Ex.

Washing Horses Feet and Legs.

In the Rural American of April 15th, I noticed an article on the above subject, which it contains some valuable hints to owners of horses, I beg leave to differ in the main or essential part of the theory advanced. He says : "A good plan is to rub the mud off the horse as clean as possible with dry straw, and the next morning wash which is one of the best cans used. his legs as clean as soap and water will do it." Now the idea is, mud should never remain on horses' legs during the night to be driven immediately into the mud again, as SOMETHING NEW AT washed off in the morning, and the horse would surely be the case if washed in the morning. It would be far better to rub the mud off in the morning than to wet the legs with water. The correct method is, to thoroughly cleanse and wash every particle of mud from their feet and lower part of their legs, with warm soap sads, and then cover them by winding small woolen blankets kept for the purpose, to remain on until be done immediately on putting them in the stable. The mud on the other portions of their body should be subconducted on cards very cheap. Also, Melainotypes for Lockets, Cases, or Frames, as well as all kinds of
