It is with not a little surprise that we look upon the number of letters inquiring about diseased trees, that have accumulated upon our hands. It is the opprobrium of scientifi; horticulture that so little has been done to investigate the subject of plant diseases. We have read about all that has been written on the subject, have talked with the most experienced promologists East and West, and find that there really little postive information extant. is really little postive information extant.
All admit the existence of certain maladies, and attempts have been made to enumerate them. A recent work on horticulture gives them. A recent work on horticulture gives them. us Latin names for these tree troubles; though it may gratify the inquiring mind to know that freezing is congelatio, and that decay is caries - we are unable to see that it adds much to our knowledge. Among the causes assigned for the unhealthy condition of our trees, some are sensible and others absurd. It is a very common thing for the would be scientific, to attribute phenomena they cannot explain to electricity and this agent has been the refuge of several of those who have written upon the diseases of plants. We have one letter before us from a photographer-who, taking a photographic view of the subject, is quite sure that the pear blight is due to the effect of the sudden light of flashes of light-ning in a dark night—th ugh he fails to tell us why this affects one tree, and leaves CAPITAL touched. In discussing this subject, we must recollect that all fruit trees are, in a measure, unhealthy; that the larger or finer our apples and pears, the more they have departed from the natural condition. This being the case, we ought not to look for politan, and perfect health in every cultivated variety. As to our ability to cure diseased trees by any medication, we doubt if it will ever be attained. To many who writes us with the view that we can prescribe something to cure their trees, we must confess our inability to do so. If good feeding will not help them, together with drainage, we fear that the case is hopeless. Want of vigor or health is often due to a lack of alkaline matter in the soil, and benefit is often experienced from a free use of lime or ashes but this is fertilization and not medication. MR. MINER: - There is one thing of great importance, that is frequently lost sight of, or rather neglected, by farmers in general that is, the proper care and manage ment of calves, through the fall and winter months. The general practice, after weaning a calf, is to let it shift for itself until snow falls, then to put it into a yard, or an open s ed, and let it pass the winter, and if it lives, all right, and if it dies, it is generally said, "that is my luck, I never could raise a calf." Now, such treatment is not only wrong, but very unprofitable, to say the least of it. After weaning your calves, put them where they can have good feed, and pure water. Keep them thriving, if you have to feed them a small quantity

Orchard and Nursery.

In December there is little to add to the Capital notes for November. Whenever the weather will allow the work there indicates to be done, do it. In mild seasons, or in Southern localities, ground for the orchard may be plowed and subsoiled. If nothing can be be done to facilitate spring operations, see that no harm comes to trees already plan-that no harm comes to trees already planted.

Fences and Gates must be looked after, and put in a condition to keep domestic animals out of young orchards. They will either browse or bark the trees, and do more dambrowse or bark the trees, and do more damage in a few hours than will be regained in all of next year's growth.

Rabbits and mice, among wild animals, often do serious damage. The best way to keep off rabbitts is, to sprinkle blood upon the trees. Leave no rubbish near young Cions may be cut whenever the wood is not frozen. Saw-dust or damp moss are better packing than sand, for the reason that they come out free from grit. The object should be to preserve the natural moisture, and not keep them any damper or dryer than they would be if left upon the tree.

Nursery the heading back and shaping of young trees is carried on in mild weather, and when the weather is inclement; the hands are occupied in-doors in root grafting.

In grafting, too much care cannot be exercised, and it is well to work at only cised, and it is well to work at only one variety at a time to avoid all possibility of mixing kinds.
