

Work for April.

ONCHARD AND NURSERY.—Assuming that the land for the new orchard has been plowed and subsoiled, and if needed, be drained, and that the needed trees have been ordered.

Planting may be done as soon as the trees come to hand. Do not leave the roots exposed any longer than necessary, and if planting can not be done at once, cover the roots with earth. Trim mutilated roots, shorten the tops and, at the same time, remove useless branches. Do not plant too deeply; make a broad opening for the roots, spread them in a natural position, cover with fine soil, press it down firmly with the foot, and the tree will not need to be staked to keep it in position.

Shrivelled Trees are to be buried, root and branch, until the bark becomes plump, and those that have started in the package, must be cut back severely.

Old Orchards are often brought in a state of fruitfulness by generous manuring and cultivation.

Grafting may be made as soon as the buds begin to swell. It is better to wait for the first indications of life in the tree than to do it earlier. Cions may be cut if the buds have not started.

Root Grubs should be planted in nursery rows as soon as the soil is in proper condition.

Seeds and Pits, for raising young nursery stock, are to be sown as early as possible. Peaches that have been buried in heaps, should be looked to. If they were dried too long before they were put with earth, they should be carefully cracked, and used. Continue to destroy eggs, and use the soap wash heretofore recommended. When protectors are used to stop the ascent of the Canker worm, see that the tar, oil, or other adhesive material is properly renewed.

FRUIT GARDEN.—Planting, grafting and general care of trees in the fruit garden is the same as for those in the orchard. Only dwarf trees are in place here, and they should be models of health and fruitfulness. Those who wish to try at the different methods of training, should consult Rivers' Miniature Fruit Garden.

Pigs may be penned in well sheltered places, but they must be taken care of and entered in the cellar, or be laid down and well protected with earth.

Quince, so beautiful whether in flower or in fruit, may be trained to form handsome pyramids, if the leading branches be kept tied up to a stake.

Currants should be in abundance in every family garden. They will bear under neglect, but will amply repay manuring and care. The Cherry and White Grape are the best; and there is a great confusion in names, and many of the large fruited sorts are good.

Gooseberries.—Houghton and the American Seedling are the common sorts free from mildew, and are more valuable green than when ripe.

Blackberries are now considered necessary in the garden. The Kittingny and Wilson's Early are the newest sorts, and both good. Dorchester and New Rochelle are older sorts.

Raspberries.—New varieties are so numerous that it is difficult to say which is best for general cultivation. The new sorts all need covering in winter. The Black-caps are hardy and popular.

Grapes.—Plant strong one or two year old vines on well drained soil, allow only a single cane to grow the first year. We have given considerable space of late to the discussion of the leading varieties. A garden of considerable extent should contain several of the standard sorts.

Strawberries.—Remove the mulch from over the rows, but leave the ground covered. Sow new beds as soon as the soil can be worked. For garden culture, beds 4 feet wide are the best; one row of plants in the centre and a row 18 inches from it on each side. The plants may be from a foot to 18 inches in the row, according to their habit of growth; the latter distance is none too much for the strong growing kinds that make large stools.

KITCHEN GARDEN.—Asparagus.—Fork over the beds if not already done, and if new plantations are needed make early. Treat beds of Rhubarb in a similar manner; both do much better when planted early before the growth starts.

Beans may be planted where there is no longer danger of frost, but it is best to sow too early at the North.—The Early Valentine is a favorite garden sort.

Beets.—Sow in rows a foot or 15 inches apart, or, if preferred, two feet apart, with radishes between. Several early kinds are better than the old Bassano.

Cabbages.—Set out the plants from cold frames. Our market gardeners put the rows 24 to 28 inches apart, with the plants sixteen inches in the rows, and then set lettuce in rows between the cabbages, but this economy of land is not usually necessary in private gardens. Harden off the plants in hot-beds by exposure. Sow seeds in open ground in drills 4 inches apart, and sprinkle with flour of bone or air slacked lime as soon as up. The Wakefield and Early York are the most common early sorts, and there are several other and newer kinds described in the catalogues.

Cauliflower is planted the same as cabbage.

Carrot.—Sow Early Horn in 15-inch drills, using plenty of seed to ensure a good stand.

Chicory.—Sow in a rich, mellow soil, in drills 8 inches apart—cover lightly with soil.

Chives.—Propagate by breaking up the cold clumps and setting the bulbs 6 inches apart.

Cress.—Whoever would keep up a supply of this pungent salad—well called pepper grass—should make a sowing every eight or ten days.

Cucumbers may be sown in cold frames from which other plants have been removed. Next month will be early enough to start on sods under glass those to be planted in the open ground.

Egg Plant.—Sow in hot-bed and cold frame. They are slow to recover if they get chilled.

Garties.—Break up the bulbs into small pieces and plant 6 inches apart in rows a foot apart.

Leeks.—Sow in rows a foot apart, in fine rich soil, and keep clear of weeds from the start.
