HORACE GREELY AS JEFFERSON DAVIS' BAIL.
It is alleged that Horace Greeley, of the New York Tribune, went to Washington, and Richmond, for the purpose of using his influence in favor of the release of Jeff. Davis, and offering himself as security, in case Davis was released. While Mr. G. had a perfect right to do this, so far as we are concerned, and an equal right to make a fool of himself in any other way, we trust he will take good-naturedly any comments or consequences, which this action provokes. For ourselves, we always tho't Davis should be hung, not because of any spite, revengeful, or even unkind feelings we entertain towards him, but because public justice, and future security demanded it. Aside from the fact, that the pardoning and releasing of all the leading rebels, invites to another rebellion, it has a tendency to demoralize the whole public sentiment of the nation towards the government. We hang Mrs. Surratt and three other poor wretches, who doubtless, all deserved their fate; but would the hellish plot to murder Mr. Lincoln have been concocted, and carried out, by these parties, had it not been for Jefferson Davis' rebellion? Was it not entered into for the purpose of aiding the rebellion, and as such, part of its devilish work? Who doubts this? Who does not know, that if, through Booth's assassin hand, the union had been overthrown, that every member of the conspiracy would have been immortalized by the rebels? Now, the immediate cause of this conspiracy against the life of the President, is released on bail, as a prelude to his final acquittal, while his poor dupes, because they were poor, and not half so criminal, were hanged. This lesson is before the country, and does anyone doubt that it lessens respect for a government that will hang poor but acquit rich criminals of crime? During the war, many poor people complained that their relatives were wounded and killed, while the general officers, and other prominent ones escaped; but after the death of the President-when the highest of the nation had fallen a victim to the fell spirit of the rebellion, the complainers were reconciled; and so it would have been in regard to the rebellion itself, if its chief had been punished as he should have been, and that he is released, is probably more owing to Horace Greeley than any other man in the country. We have said that Mr. G. had done as he pleased in the premises, for a man may burn down a house, or murder his neighbor, if he chooses to abide the consequences to himself; but we do object to a man's bringing odium upon his country, and weakening it toward upon the people, by exposing it to ridicule and censure. This he has done in this business. Nor can he release himself on the plea of magnanimity. Must his whims on this score be gratified at the expense of the nation? And, we think he will be greatly disappointed in the supposition, which no doubt has led him on, that he will be applauded by the liberal minded of the land. He has become the apologist of the greatest criminal of the age, and why? Not because this criminal needed his assistance. For all the bail, and all the money Davis could use were preferred besides, and he could have secured it by his own means, had it been needed. And if Davis had been poor and despised, would Greeley have plead for his release, and spent his own money in going to Richmond to offer himself as surety? Who believes this? Why did he not go and help Mrs. Surratt, who really needed help? His magnanimity was out there. He could get no notoriety there. Oh, poor humanity, how its greatness leaks out through its weak selfish promptings!

JEFFERSON DAVIS.

The city dailies have given us long and thrilling accounts of the passage of Jefferson Davis from Fortress Monroe to the city of Richmond, whither the arch-traitor was called by a writ of habeas corpus, issued by Judge Underwood. The boat was crowded with curious and obsequious people, and every place from the point of starting to the landing crowds gathered to see his Satanic majesty. Two bridal parties went up on the boat in order to get a little notoriety, and add eclat to the liberation of the grand criminal. Some of the rebel ladies, dear creatures, shed tears when they saw the pale, haggard look of the dishonored chief. We suppose some people would cry, if Beezebub was released, after he had been chained a while. When the name of John M. Botts was called out in the Court House, as one of Davis' bail, a great buzz went up, because, we suppose, Botts had not been a true rebel. There is no accounting for tastes, or the queer whim of people. We are surprised at one piece of great disrespect, and want of feeling, on the part of Gen. Burton, and his subordinates, who had Davis in charge, (and we should not be surprised if he was instantly dismissed from the public service when it gets to the ears of our worthy President,) and that was, that the Stars and Stripes were hoisted and allowed to wave over the boat during its passage up the James, with Davis and William B. Reed on it; and it is surprising that these worthies would remain on it under such a standing insult. Hope the Government officials will make hasty and due apologies for this grievous offense, and suggest that the Honorable Edgar Cowan be appointed on a special mission for this purpose. Mr. Doolittle goes to Russia, and why should not Cowan go some where on a special embassy? Davis was released on bail, and is therefore, now at large. The result we anticipated more than a year ago; and what a pretty farce Johnson's reward of a hundred thousand dollars, which he offered, and paid out of the public treasury, for Davis' arrest, turns out to be? The arrest, imprisonment, and mock trial, which he is to have, costing not less than half a million of dollars, all of which could have been saved if Davis had been suffered to flee in the first place, and this should have been done. For then, besides saving this waste of public money, the nation would have been spared the dishonor which the pusillanimous conduct of the administration has brought upon it in its management of the great criminal. From this out Davis will be a hero. The great martyr of a great cause. Had he been left to flee all this disgrace would have been averted.

-A man named Robert Taylor, of Catkins, was shot and instantly killed by James McGuire, in a grocery-store at Stuyvesant Landing, on Tuesday night. They were both interested, and getting into a quarrel, McGuire drew a pistol and shot Taylor, he says, in self-defense. The ball penetrated the brain of the latter, causing instant death. McGuire, who belongs to Peckskill, where his parents reside, was immediately arrested.

-The ship-building interest of New-England is now suffering greater depression than it has experienced for years, and many of the yards are silent and deserted. Only about sixty vessels are now on the stocks in the entire State of Massachusetts. In New-Hampshire and Maine the business is somewhat brisker, though competition with the ship-builders of the British Provinces is difficult and discouraging.

-At Bradford, Mass., a spiritualist named Smith, held a seance at his house on Tuesday night, which was disturbed by some young men of the village. This enraged Smith, who rushed out with a pistol and shot one of them, named Samuel Webster, dead. Smith then surrendered himself to the authorities. Webster leaves a wife and family.

-On Thursday evening the body of an unknown man was found in the woods near New-Brunswick, N. J. There was nothing about his person to indicate who he was. The evidence before the Coroner's Jury showed that he was killed by a pistol ball, but whether fired by his own hand or that of an assassin could not be determined. He was about thirty years of age, had dark hair, and had been dead five or six days.

-A member of one of the Boston churches, who has been laboring among the fallen women of that city, has persuaded twenty-three to return to their homes, seven of whom have been converted, and five others were furnished homes in Christian families. By his efforts one notorious house of ten inmates has been closed.

Despatches from Europe state that the conference of representatives of leading powers which had assembled in London to try to reconcile the Luxemburg difficulties between Prussia and France has been successful. The terms of the settlement are the guarantee by the great Powers of Europe of the neutrality of the Grand Duchy of Luxemburg, which is to remain, as heretofore provided by the treaty of 1839, under the rule of the King of Holland. In order that these provisions may be effectually carried out, the fortress of Luxemburg is to be razed to the ground, the Prussian troops are to be withdrawn, and no army is to remain within the territory of the duchy except such a limited force as may be required for the purposes of police.

Mexican News by way of Havana through Imperial sources represent that the Liberal forces besieging Queretaro have been defeated; that Miramon, instead of being dead, is pressing the Liberal forces to the wall. It is further stated that Maximilian had entered the City of Mexico with 8,000 men, and had defeated Diaz, capturing all his artillery and 1,500 prisoners, the latter immediately joining the Imperial forces. The messenger, sent by our Minister, Hon. L. D. Campbell, to Juarez, has just reached New-Orleans, and brings news which contradicts the above. He reports Escobedo at Queretaro with 35,000 men, in possession of all the roads but one. Maximilian was in the city, with 15,000 men, and it was confidently believed that he would speedily surrender. The Liberals feel very bitter toward Maximilian and his native officers, and it is doubtful if Juarez can save their lives in case of their being taken prisoners. The lightning played strange freaks in the house of Mr. Joshua Jeffries, Trenton, Mr. J., May 13. It entered the house on the roof, by the side of the chimney, shivering one of the rafters, and knocking down a quantity of the ceiling of the upper bedroom. It then passed down the frame of a large mirror hanging against the chimney, shivering the frame, then down the iron support of a small center-table, then along the floor, ripping up the carpet and tearing out pieces of the flooring, and so out of the side of the house. From this point it passed along between the tin roofing and the wood of the kitchen roof, and followed down a tin water pipe into the ground, tearing up the bricks and making a hole about a foot in depth. No one in the house was injured, although a servant girl was badly scared by it.
