THE GREAT ENCHANTER.

Sleep makes us all pashas.
—Bedouin Proverb.

Sleep is the poor man's warmest cloak; His treasurer to dispense His lavish alms, and turn to gold His scanty pence.

He heals a sick man in a dream, And sets the fettered free; He calls the beggar from his den To golden Luxury.

He crowns the hounded exile king. Reverses Fate's decrees; And bids the briefless Pleader rise Judge of the Common Pleas.

Sleep joins the parted lover's hands, Wreathes the starved poet's brow; And calls the hero still unknown

From lonely village plow. Sleep holds the resurrection keys. And from his shadowy plain, Down Memory's long and cloudy vaults,

The dead come back again. Sleep comes, like death alike to all Divine equality! Blesses the monarch in his state.

The slave upon the sea. Sleep brings our childhood back again. The only Golden age;

Sleep! O thou blessed alchemist

Thou holy Archimage.

HOTHING HAS HAPPENED

We have a friend in this city, says the Lancaster (Pa.) Express, who is very fond of telling a joke. He has quite a number of real good ones, none of which we believe have ever appeared in print. We give one of them below, and if it "takes" well, we may furnish others. The story"

Some years ago, a farmer, living in a village bordering on Berks county, furnished one of his three sons with a sum of money and told him to go to the West and remain two years, at the end of which time he should return to Lancaster, stop at Schofield's, and one would be there to meet him. The young man started on his travels, and at the end of the specified time he returned. It should be premised that telegraphs were not literary attainments were not so genways have the best of everything, their means in securing the nomination eral, hence no communication took the old lady put him to sleep in the and election of such men as Judge place between the parties. He returned, however, as we said. His brother was there to meet him, and they both proceeded homeward in a buggy. THE "BLACK DEATH."—The horrors of the Black Death, which swept all Europe in its terrible course, are five centuries old and exist only in legendary history and tradition. The Plague came somewhat nearer one day and left a more definite record of itself. But it is a long time since the Western nations have been smitten by the scourge of God with the severity of former days. The cholera has been regular in its visitation, but its ravages have been comparatively light. It appears, however, that a strange and terribly fatal disease exists in Ireland, and has existed there for some seventeen months, which malady, which in other respects resembles a wonderfully active fever. consists in the appearance of purple spots upon the body of the patient, which spread over his person and increase in depth of color until death. The rapidity with which the disease progresses to a fatal conclusion is remarkable, in some instances not more than four hours elapsing between the attack and the death of the patient. In other cases the patient has lingered for several days, and in a less violent phase of the malady a sickness of several weeks has been followed by recovery. The average is about eighteen hours from the first the patients preserved their senses dren were prostrated, with the same malady. Its nature is unknown, and

TORPEDORS IN EVERY HOUSE - Gunpowder in the open air burns quietly. In order to show that it has power we must confine it. - Except from guns, firecrackers, &c., we might not have found out that gunpowder can make a great noise.

There is a common sort of frictionmatch composition that is little more explosive than gunpowder. It burns quicker, and when confined it gives a sharper and louder report. The matches to which we allude iguite with a flash and with a slight crackling sound. Most of the matches called parlor matches are of this sort. The readiest way of making a match explode is to lay it on the floor and press it with the heel of the boot. The report in sharpness and loudness is about the same as that of a percussion cap. Another way of give the composition end a slight low with a hammer. The explosion will be as loud as before, and the pathe stoutest musket. Children should ing matches. It is dangerous. The melancholy fate of the Austrian princess, betrothed to the son of Victor Emmanuel, and burned to death but the other day in consequence of treading on a lucifer match, is a warning in point.
