Selected Poetry. MUSE OF LABOR.

The banging of the hammer, The whistling of the plane, The clanking of the busy saw, The creaking of the crane, The ringing of the anvil, The grating of the drill, The clattering of the turning-lathe, The whirling of the mill, The humming of the spindle, The rattling of the loom, The puffing of the engine, The fan's continual boom, The clapping of the tailor's shears, The driving of the saw, These sounds of honest industry, I love-I love them all.

The clinking of the magic type, The earnest talk of men, The tolling of the grand press, The scratching of the pen, The tapping of the yard stick, The tinkling of the scales, The whistling of the needle, (When no bright cheek it pales) The humming of the cooking stove, The singing of the broom, The rattling of the washboard, The hammer's busy hum, The bustling of the scholar, The teacher's kindly call, These sounds of active industry, I love-I love them all.

I love the plowman's whistle, The reaper's cheerful song, The driver's oft repeated shout, The sower's stock along, The bustle of the market man, As he hies him to the town, The halloo from the tree-top, As the ripened fruit comes down, The busy sound of threshers, As they clean the ripened grain, The hucker's joke and catch of glee, 'Neath the moonlight on the plain, The kind voice of the dryman, The shepherd's gentle call, These sounds of pleasant industry, I love-I love them all.

Selected Tale. ROSE OF SHARON.

It was a dull time in Wall street one sultry afternoon in August. Business was over for the day, but Mr. Emmerson still lingered in his office, perhaps because no pleasant home called him away. Certainly the little room, with its piles of account books and swarms of flies, could have possessed no attraction for any but a homeless man.

The day had been one of unprecipitated success, even to Mr. Emmerson. A lucky bid on gold had resulted in a small fortune, an oil well had sprung into existence on a tract which his former possessor had sold for a song as a barren waste, and some railroad stock in which he held numerous shares advanced beyond all expectation. Yet no evidence of exultation was visible in his appearance, any farther than giving the little flower-girl who daily brought her choicest bouquets to the wealthy broker, a double price for her roses.

He was guilty of no departure from his usual methodical ways. If any man in Wall street had cause for satisfaction and self-congratulation it was Mr. Emmerson, when he remembered the struggles by which he attained his present commercial eminence. It was well known among his acquaintances that not many years before he had returned penniless to his native city after a short residence in Europe, which had proved neither creditable nor profitable. He was no misanthrope, but a cloud of care or sorrow seemed to hang around his happiest moments, and although his constant reserve secured him from the intrusions of the curious, rumor had generally assigned an unhappy marriage as the cause; but beyond that of speculation society had no resource.

Young Harry Waltham stepped into the office on his way down town this afternoon, and was warmly welcomed. "Well, Harry, how has the world used you to-day?" Mr. Emmerson inquired, shaking hands with his friend.

"Business has been unusually dull at one place, thank you. I heard of your streak of fortune with genuine pleasure. When Atkins told me of this morning, I said, if there is a man in New York who deserves success, it is my friend Emmerson!" "You are wasting enthusiasm, Harry. I think we all get more than our deserts in this world, or we should be poor indeed." Mr. Emmerson replied gravely, but kindly, and glancing towards his friend he detected the absence of his usual gaiety.

"What has gone wrong with you, Harry? more obstructions in the course of true love?" he asked with his pleasant humor. Harry Waltham, mellowed by the success of his morning, and self-controlled by the struggle with some emotion, it was a moment before he could speak calmly.
