Agricultural. Cheese-Making in Families. Some families, keeping only a few cows, and living at an inconvenient distance from any "cheese factory, would like to make a few cheese du ring the heat of summer, for family use, if no more, and are deterred from the want of practical knowledge. To such I address myself with the following few practical directions.

A few necessary, simple articles are needed to commence with; these can be ned from the agricultural implement stores generally. A brass kettle or cheese tub, or both, to heat and set the milk in; a good basket to drain the curd in; a lever press and hoops with followers, to press the cheese; a linen strainer, and rennet. The beginner will learn more in a single day in visiting an experienced dairy-woman and watching her operations, than in several days from printed directions; yet the good judgment of most women will scarcely allow of a failure when following plain, practical directions. It is commonly practiced to set the milk at night and "run up" but once a day, but a richer cheese is made by running up after each milking. I will only describe the common practice which I am familiar with. Set the milk at night the same as for butter. In the morning, while the cows are being milked, remove the cream, and heat the night's milk to the temperature of new milk. The morning's milk is now strained, and mixed with the night's milk in the kettle or tub, as suits. The milk being thus made ready the rennet is added and allowed to stand quietly till the "curd comes." which should be in 20 to 30 minutes. The quantity of rennet to add is determined after trial, more being added if the curd does not come in time.-The rennet consists of the salted and dried stomach of the calf, prepared usually by the butchers. This is prepared for cheese making by taking a piece two or three inches square and seaking it in half a pint of water over night in a suitable cup. When the curd has "come," carefully cut it across both ways, about 11 or 2 inches apart, with a long-bladed knife reaching to the bottom; let it stand for the whey to separate, and then carefully dip it off, and work the curd gently with the hand, to favor separation of the whey.

To make the curd firmer, some of the whey is warmed to feel somewhat warm to the hand, and poured over the curd and stirred, and left to stand a moment to heat the curd evenly when it is dipped off and the curd adipped into the strainer, laid in the cheese basket over a tub to drain into, and the whey allowed to drain off. If the cheese is to be only one day's curd, it is now salted with about an ounce of salt to ten pounds of curd; if two day's curd, the salting is omitted till the next day, and the curd PEACHES, PRUNES, CHERRIES, tied up in the strainer and put under a light pressure. When the next day's curd is prepared they are both cut in small pieces and mixed, when both are scalded, as first described, and after dipping into the strainer MOLASSES, COFFEE, SPICES. and draining a little, is broken and salted evenly as before directed. It is now ready for the press, and is taken in the strainer, put in the hoop and put to press under a moderate pressure! . After about twelve hours it is taken from the press, the strainer opened, and the cheese corners trim-med, if necessary, turned the other side up, put in the press hoop, and put back to press under heavies pressure, which may be gradually increased till done The time the cheese should remain under pressure depends upon the power applied; usually 24 to 36 hours will be sufficient for a common sized one. If the pressure is too heavy at first, it will press out the "juice," and the cheese will be of poorer quality than where more moderate pressure is used.

When the cheese comes from the press it is put on a board about the size of the diameter of the cheese, and set away in the drying room, which should be neither too warm nor too cool, as in a cool, damp room they cure slowly, and are apt to mould; if too warm they are apt to spread, etc.; to prevent this thin cotton bandages are put around the cheese when first taken from the press and sometimes pressed on .--Dailysturning, rubbing to keep from moulding and getting out-of shape, and greasing with butter to prevent cracking, etc., till well cured, completes the process. Some, to give a yellow cast to the cheese, add, when they put in the rennet, annatto; but I would advise not. Exposing the curd equally to the air, when cut before pressing, for a short time, will give it a natural rich color without the dye stuff. It is needless to add that cleanliness in every particular, from the milking of the cows to the completion of the process, is essential to making good cheese. W. H. W.

STABLES.—A correspondent of the Field, Turf and Farm devotes a column, in that journal, to Stable architecture and management in connection with the development of the Horse. In regard to these he says mankind generally evince a most serious want of knowledge-a want which entails serious losses. Many places dignified by the name of stable are sinks of filth and rottenness located in some low, dark, damp alley with little room, less light, nearly void of air and surrounded with mounds of reeking filth. What the horse especially wants to secure a perfect development of his powers s cleanliness, exercise, warmth, light, light, and pure air. This is true, and farmers would do well to heed the

L'ARMER'S MUTUAL FIRE INSU RANCE COMPANY

The Farmers Mutual Fire Insurance Company of Middle Pennsylvania was incorporated by the Pennsylvania Legislature, in the year 1859, for the Mutual Insurance of Country property only, and immediately thereafter commenced its operations on that principle, which has been strictly adhered to since.

All losses have been promptly paid out of the Premiums collected on application for insurance without making any assessments.

The Insurance of Country property only, the low rates charged for Insurance, and the prompt payment of losses are deemed a sufficient recommendation of the Farmers Mutual Fire Insurance Company of Middle Penns Ivania, to all owners of sale class country property.
