used in preference to all others."

This is represented by respectable and reliable parties to be a very early, quick maturing Draimhead Cabbage, of large size, fine quality, few outside leaves, sure to head, and not liable to burst open when fully grown. Very fine either as an early cabbage; or as a late dabbage; its quick growth allows of very late planting as a second crop, after peas and other early vegetables. In the Spring of 1867, the Boston market gardeners were eager to buy the little seed, to be had of this cabbage, at $5 per ounce. counce.
