They see the beautics of the world ;

But still they cry-"All, all is vain !"

And long for scenes of Youth again.

As memory's leaves they linger o'er,

Each scene grows darker than before :

O'er sunny seas-a summer's day-

And all has perished in the blast !

You, too, will leave your fireside ;

And realize that youth was sent-

The spring of life-to learn to wield

The sword on Life's great battle-field ;

Then soldier-life, shrink not from toil,

The victor alone can share the spoil !

You then will see the hours misspent,

The night, the tempest, now are past,

As Time moves on with giant stride,
