A Boarding-House Romance

BY AMY RANDOLPH. The clock had just struck nine. Hugh Dyson and his friend, Mr. Carhart, were enjoying a snug little bachelor tete-a-tete by the light of the shaded gas-burner. They were a curious pair; similar, and yet not alike; fond of one another's society, and yet not alike; fond of one another's society, and yet constituted very: differently. Hugh was a tall, strongly-made Saxon, with fair hair, clear blue eyes, and a fresh, healthy complexion; while it would have required only a mantle, a plum-law required by take. And you knew it and the while, and hid away like a fright-level the while, and hid away like a fright-law required by take. And you knew it and the whole at the while, and hid away like a fright-level the while, and then you gave him bat-law until death came to my signal rected by take. Hugh Dyson and his friend, Mr. Carhave required only a mantle, a plum-ed hat, and a rapier to convert Selwyn Carhart into a Spaniard of the days of the Inquisition. Then you're really determined to make a change in your quarters," observed the latter, as he listlessly turned over the uncut leaves of a newly arrived magazine. "Why, I thought you had struck root here like a thrifty young geranium!"

"I can't stand it," said Dyson, rue

IRINE DEOLLERY.

An annuing story is related of Daines Barrington, this eminent jurist, and Recorder of Bristol. Having to appear for a plantiff in a case at Clonmel, he let into the defendant n unmeasured terms. The individual inveighed against not being present, only heard of the investives. After Barrington, however, had got back into Dublin, the defendant, a Tipperary man, named Foley, lost no time in paying his compliments to the counsel. He rode all day and the counsel. He rode all day and night, and covered with sleet, arrived before Barrington's residence in Harcourt sixeet, Dublin. Throwing the bridle of his smoking home over the railing of the area, he announced his arrival by a thundering knock at the door. Barrington's valet answered door. Barrington's valet answered
