ast Independent Republican : A BUTTER STORY. - About 1833, a family named SICELER, OF VAN SICELER, moved into Towards, and took up as a residence a place formerly occupied as a hotel. On the premises was a deep well, originally dug by, or for, Mr. Means, the hotel keeper. At the time of building or stoning up the well, a stone shelf was inserted, by order of the landlord, about ten feet down, for the purpose of depositing in a cool place butter, beef, and such other articles as might be considered necessary to its preservation. The and took up as a residence à place formerly occonsidered necessary to its preservation. The or thought they did, the presence of decaying word in the water, and it was decided to have the well cleaned out. Accordingly two old patriots were detailed for the work. Their combined efforts, after a few hours' labor, resulted in fishing up a butter firkin, tightly sealed, but black with age, and its old staves nearly rotted through. Mr. MEANS, the old landlord, long since retired from business, and then residing a short distance from the place, was sent fer
