Agricultural.

Fallacies in Building.

John Henry, Patterson, N.J., thus details some of them in the Scientific American:

To suppose that timber, growing in the woods or floating in the water to-day, can be placed in a building next week, and stay where it is put.

That if such timber be used, the walls will not crack.

That the base, window panels, casings, etc., made of such timber will not part company with the floors from one-fourth to three fourths of an inch in less than a year, and that the builder pat unseasoned lumber in the latter.

The kiln-dried lumber is as good as lumber thoroughly air-seasoned, or that the atmosphere has no influence upon it.

That a joint once tight will always remain so.

That if trimmings be put up before plastering,or trimmed on green walls, that putty will not be in great demand when they dry.

The hot air from a furnace will not start and open every piece of wood-work with which it comes in contact, nine times out of ten.

That if partitions be not properly braced, bridged, and secured at angles, that plastering will not crack.

That ceilings are less likely to crack if cross furred.

That a pailful of lime to a cartload of sand will make mortar of any practical use, either for plastering or brick work.

That it injures mortar by mixing it some time before using it, or that if mixed one day and applied the next, it won't blister and crack.

That a cement roof, so soft that it fills the leaders in summer, or so hard cracks in winter, will not occasion the want of new ceilings in a little time.

That a "botch" can build as good a building as a thorough mechanic.

That in all cases money is saved by contracting with the lowest bidder.

That all knowledge in relation to building is embodied in every one who signs "Architect" after his name.

That architects and builders never "lay in together," and owners never get "shorn" through that little arrangement.

That architects, as a rule, get no other commissions on buildings except the traditional "five per cent. on the cost."

That builders always carry out plans and specifications to the letter.

That there are no high-minded, conscientious, competent architects, and no honest, reliable builders; and that either class does not bear a reputation equal to that of any other business men.

That a builder does not require an extended theoretical,nor an architect as extended a practical knowledge,to be successful.

That no builder can be a successful architect, or that a practical architect cannot be a successful builder.

That you, reader, without practical knowledge, know a great deal more about the details of a house than of a locomotive.

Saving and Storing Seed.

Every tiller of the soil should make calculations for saving his own seed, as well as for raising a crop. A bountiful crop cannot be produced without choice seed. As such a large proportion of farmers and gardeners neglect this important practice, it is proper to dwell on the subject, reiterating the details several times every season. From June to October,crops will be maturing. Wheat, barley, and oats, in some localities, are even now ready for the harvest. If there is any difference at all in the appearance of the standing grain at harvest time, let a small plot here and another patch there, be staked off; and let the grain stand until the seed has become fully ripe. Then let it be harvested and stored by itself, where grain of an inferior quality cannot be mingled with it.

The way to develop an improved variety of seed is to travel through the standing grain just as the ears and panicles begin to ripen; and when a head of wheat or barley, or a panicle of oats, is discovered that appears to be of an earlier variety than most of the ears around about it, tie a red string on the stem,and see that all such seed is gathered separately, and stored where mice or birds cannot devour the grain. Let such seed be sowed in rich ground, and the product cultivated, for a few years with care; and a wonderful improvement will soon be seen in the crops raised from such improved seed.

Seed of red clover is obtained from the second growth of the stems, after the first growth has been mowed or grazed off; and in many instances,the yield of seed is so small that it will scarcely cancel the expense of harvesting and hulling, simply because the first crop was allowed to grow too long before it was cut. In order to be certain of a paying crop of seed, the first crop should be cut before half the heads have blossomed. Then sufficient strength will remain in the roots to produce a fair crop of seed.

The seed of garden vegetables should be saved with care from the specimens that ripen first. The melons, squashes, pumpkins and cucumbers that ripen first, should be allowed to mature on the vines until they are dead ripe and begin to decay. Then the seed will be fully matured, and the plants which spring from it the next season, will produce much better and larger vegetables than seed which has been saved from immature products.

The seed of cabbages, turnips, parsnips and carrots, is now maturing. In order to secure large and plump kernels, clip off all the small and half-matured pods and panicles, leaving none but the large ones to mature. A few hours' labor in saving good seed, will often be the means of doubling the quantity of the crop.

WASHES FOR ROOFS AND BUILDINGS.—The following is recommended by a practical man: Slake lime in a close box to prevent the escape of steam, and when slaked, pass it through a sieve. To every six quarts of this lime, add one quart of rock salt and one gallon of water. After this boil and skim clean. To every five gallons of this, add, by slow degrees, three quarters of a pound of potash and four quarts of fine sand. Coloring matter may be added if desired. Apply with a paint or whitewash brush.

Don't waste the soap suds, but apply it to garden, vines, bushes, evergreens, or lawn. It is far too valuable to be turned out at the back door.

You should study two things. First,to

GET THEM WHERE FIRST-CLASS CLOTHING IS MADE.

Secondly,

WHERE THEY ARE SOLD CHEAP

And in order to be able to sell a good article cheap the merchant must understand his business, and know how, where and what to buy as a practical man does; and a

RAWSON

Mowing Machine.

HARVEST OF 1871.

A NEW INVENTION.

PATENTED NOVEMBER 29, 1870.

And applied to every Machine; is so constructed, that you do not have to use the lever in turning either way. It will run on any line just as easy as on a straight line, taking all the side pressure from the horses. It has a full joint and will describe a full circle either way, saving half the labor for the horses and driver. The upper frame is so jointed or attached to the lower frame, as to form a lifting lever taking a large part of the weight of the bar from the ground and placing it back upon the driving-wheels, and lessening the draft of the machine, making one of the lightest draft machines in use.

The machine has been greatly improved and is manufactured by using wrought iron and steel in the place of cast iron. The Caster Wheel is upon a steel spring with wrought iron holders, making it light and strong. We can say to farmers that they can depend upon having a machine that has no equal. It has cast steel shafts, and both sides plated with cast steel. Machines are warranted in every particular. If any part breaks from defects in material or workmanship new parts will be sent without extra charge.

The Finger Bar is carried at both ends on wheels; can change the wheels so as to cut three heights of stubble. The machine has a flexible finger bar, and will conform to the inequalities of the ground over which it is drawn, doing as good work upon uneven ground as upon even ground.

THE REAR BAR MACHINE

Has a cable folding Finger Bar, having a longitudinal, oscillating motion. This machine has wheels at both ends of the finger bar, and is so arranged that you can set them to cut any height, and can back out without raising the lever.

SULKY RAKES.

We have also two manufactories of the Sulky Rakes; the well-known Taylor Rake and the Dayton Manufacturing Company Rakes, making two of the best Rakes in use, at wholesale or retail.
