These mines have been in an unsafe condition for some time, and a tew days ago the indications of danger became so decided that the miners concluded to abandon them on Saturday, which they did but a few hours previous to the caving, thereby preventing a horror not second to the late Pittston disaster.

A portion of the tools and implements were successfully removed, but part of mine collapsed anddenly, filling the yet undisturbed chambers with such a powerful rush of air that boxes, tools, cars, etc., were hurled in all directions, while, fortunately, no one was in the mine, and all further attempts at removing them was abandoned. The mass of mine fell on Saturday evening, startling the city, althous and so spectators immediately flocked to the scene, notwithstanding the threatening appearance of the banks, but no accident occurred.
