Friginal Poetry THE FIRST SNOWFLAKE.

Drifting down from the leaden sky, Through endloss regions of airy space, With many a whirl and many a plunge, . In a wild and a reckless downward race

Floating afar, on the wings of the wind. All that is pure in your crystal home.

No one your fairy presence to greet, Then, in the rush of the hurrying throng Trampled and mixed with the filth of the [street. . .

Tiny, white wanderer from the skies. Oh! why did you leave your home of cloud? You were too pure, too fragile, too fair, To mingle on earth with its motley crowd

Your spotless beauty and innocence Shaming the guilt of the passer by, For n ne can be pure and chaste as you Under the frowning Winter sky. Appir M. R____

Towanda, Nov. 28, 1871. OUR DARLING.

BY ANNIE ELLSWORTH. In the bright and shining mansions Where the angels robed in white, Sing sweet songs of joy and gladness There our darling dwells in light.

Like the ivy's clinging tendrals, Twined our heartstringsround this flor The fair bud of hope and promise. Tenderest in the "sweet home " bower.

But our hearts too soon were raddened. For a shadow fell one day, And the loving sunlight faded When our daring passed away. Unseen angels came at sunset,

With their quivering pinions bright, And snatched our precious blussom To transplant in Heaven's own light.

We love to think our darling, From her blissful home above Sometimes whispers through the doorway, "Come and meet me=God is love !" Yes, we'll meet thee, httle darling, Day by day our prayer shall be That God will keep us safely,

Till we reach Lright Heaven and thee. INTEREST AID ON DEPOSITS ACCORDING TO AGREEMENT. Bome, Pa., Oct. 30, 1871.
