The effect produced by them is that upon an oyster baked in a Dutch oven.

That was in the old Capitol, afterward burned down by the British. But the new Capitol is perhaps no better ventilated. It is of course a more gorgeous, as well as a larger building; but no air could be more scientifically damnable than that which our present Congressmen have to breathe. The attack of illness which smote down Mr. Colfax last and towns made up of laborers thrive lifting his face, dares to say that he the atmosphere of the Senate Chamber, especially during executive sessions. For then the room is corked so that no secret can get out, and no oxygen can get in. Let it not be imagined that our wise men here are not wise enough to know the harmthat this wretched ventilation does them. They are perfectly aware of it. Again and again have they complained of it, and generously voted the people's money to have the evil cured. Again and again, have architects and mechanics overhauled and renewed the arrangements for ventilation; and the more they do, the worse the evil. Let us accompany a Congressman through a single journey of twenty-
