FRIENDS AND FELLOW-CITIZENS: For this manifestation of your regard, I return you my sincere thanks. I am disposed to attribute this visit more to your friendship for me as a citizen and a soldier, than as a candidate for office. There is nothing so grateful to a soldier's heart as the approbation of his fellow-men. For this he endures privations and encounters dangers; he faces wounds, disease and death cheerfully in the performance of duty to his country, * words, "well done." But when he place and the home of his youth, it is doubly grateful to him. I was born in this city and on this street. There are a few here present who will remember when the house standing at the head of this street was considered out of town; when Court-street did not extend above the Court-house, and when the great pine woods commenced at Oakstreet.
