Griginal Poetry MY QUEEN! Such a morning! warm and bright, Hill and vale ablaze with light,

Aradford

Such a rare and goodly sight— Gorgeous banners trailing down, Scarlet, crimson, gold and brown, All for thee, this royal crown, Lovely Autumn Queen!

I must be a slave to-day, Kneeling at thy sceptre's sway, Young again, and blithe and gay, 'Neath these shining skies.

What though Death lurks in thy train, Sodden leaves and dropping rain-Have a time for weary pain, When thy glory dies.

Yes, my Queen, I'll follow thee, When thy white hand beckons me, To the woodland ione and free, Where the wild wind sings Such a grand old wordless hymn,

That the lofty sisles grow dim, And my full heart to the brim . Throbs with holy things Many yesterdays have flown, Since I followed thee, my own!

And thy kingdom is o'erthrown Like a passing dream. Faithful am I, still, my sweet! Now when tears and sobs are meet, See, I kiss thy hands and feet, Oh, my dying Queen!

[From Cassell's Magazine]. IN THE LION'S DEN. A STORY TOLD ON A MOUNTAIN TOP.

"Nice place to dine, isn't it?" said Frank Lightfoot, as we seated ourselves around our well filled provision bag on the summit of Mont Blane, with the panorama of fortyeight mountain ranges outspread beneath us, and the echo of the Chamouni cannon still in our ears: "I wonder whether the march of civilization will ever erect a hotel up here -there's just room for a moderate

"Nobody knows what may happen, replied Franks sententiously; you wouldn't have expected, this time last year, to be dining three miles above the sea to-day."

"Well, I had a funny kind of dinner last autumn," said Lightfoot, by a mist on the Grand Combin We piled stones to keep off the wind: and cold mutton, as if we had been in the trenches before Sevastopol." "Well, I can beat you both there. said Harry with a chuckle: "for I've had a dinner worth three of of those, though I'd hardly care to try i again; but its a long story." pumped my arm with all the vigor and familiarity that the streets had put in him.

"Yes. sir-ee! I will that, you bet!" vowed Billy. Soon after he subsided I heard his soft breath going in and out the + doors of his lips in regular cadences. While he slept and started up to fight his skirmishes over, I flogged my weak brain to work and plan. When I look back at that wretch in soiled tayern sheets, glaring into the darkness with watery eyes, my legs tremble under me, though they have gone stoutly these many years. It was such a very straight path up from that place, and I came so mear falling, time after time.

The next day I got work on the railroad. From the gutter I could not go directly back to the bar, since drunkenness is one of the vices which is not tolerated in lawyers. It was hard to shovel dirt in the hot sun. I sat down half fainting. A good natured Patrick came slyly with a bot-tle, and bade me "whist at it," which I put forth the will to—like a wild beast - when Billy swooped down from a passing freight and squared himself before that Irisman, while the very tatters at his elbow bristled with wrath. "Look here now," threatened he, sending the bottle far over the track, if you get my father to drinkin' again, I'll kick vou."

After I had delved awhile, Billy had a new suit, a set of books, and school privileges. Then a situation as copyist was opened to me. The boy and I fell into the habit of striking hands and going to church on a Sunday. Some of my old friends began to notice me.
