Their only line of retreat would seem to be in a southerly direction into the Pitt River Mountains. The tribes in that quarter are of a warlike character, and have given the government con- siderable trouble in times past. In 1858 and 1859, their ambushes were so effective, and their manner of war- fare so advantageous, that at first very little progress was made in re- ducing them to submission. The Pitt River savages, when pressed closely, would take to their cances and paddle to the islands in the lakes where they could not be followed. After much care and trouble several boats were built and transferred across the lava beds. One of the la- test measures of precaution taken by Gen. Canby, was to place boats on Tule Lake. The troops, in pursuing the Mo- docs, have to follow them on foot, and in passing through the gulches and crevices, must expect to find the enemy on the high bluffs above them	those around them, and above all, how far they remove themselves from the beautiful land we all hope to reach by and by, it does seem as if they would be more careful how they did it. But while human nature re- mains the strange anomaly it is, pro- bably men and women will go on getting mad and making fools of themselves, just as they always have done. VERITAS. "TAXES ABE TOO HIGH !"-So says many a man who spends five dollars per week for intoxicating liquors, or who puffs over one hundred dollars per year in the smoke of expensive cigars. Another spends his time in bow- ling alleys and billiard saloons, con- fides his business to a clerk and complains bitterly of his taxes. Alas, young man, if your idleness tax- es you much more you had better close the shop. Taxes are heavy, but we too often	occasion Mr. Bradley determined to be rid of his unwelcome visitor, with- out doing any violence to his urban- ity. When the visit had been suf- ficiently protracted he said to his friend: "Mr.A., when I was in Washing- ton, one of the foreign ministers was kind enough to give me a root which, when tasted, has the power of con- ferring immortality; at least no one who has ever tasted it has since died. When you go I will give you a small piece of it." In a few minutes Mr. A. rose and said he would go and should esteem it an everlasting favor to have a small piece of that root.
