The sentiment which the custom embodies is one that we cannot afford to let die, or grow faint; and even if the sinti-ment were less worthy, the custom that has grown out of it is so beautifully expressive that it must be preserved among us. Any custom which tends away from the reatless, hard utili-tarianism which marks the line of American life, is one to be welcomed and cherished. Let us, therefore, keep always fresh this beautiful fashion of strewing flowers on the soldiers' graves. Wherever port as follows : tor The place to buy a first-class place on Friday last.
