Belected Poetry. BY THE RIVER.

In darkness and gloom I am floating,

The learning of Plato and Pascal

Is madly at work in my brain;

Does justice exist? Oh, where is it?

Still the heart of the tyrant is stone.

Still he heeds not, he hears not, their m

From that which we see and we know.

Of the heart-broken pierced to the skies

Still his victims are toiling, despairing;

T is vain that you tell me, hereafter

These things are not to be so;

For centuries long have the curses

For centuries long has no answer

If I call upon Nature for comfort,

Returned to their desolate cries.

It is silent and grim as the grave;

The winds will not stop at my question-

No reply from the long-sounding wave.

Pure and calm as the flakes of the snow,

And the stars, as they glitter above me,

Look as cold on the sorrows of mortals,

As they looked in the years long ago.

Oh, give ma! oh, give me my childhood,

When I knell at the feet of my mother,

And gently she taught me my prayer.

And the willows are sweeping its brink;
