This town:

This town is a Regibilean stronghold nevertheless, for a month previous, and in fact after the nomination for officers were made, it was clear to the mind of every thinking man, that defeat and disgrace stared the party in the face in this town. Stiunch old Republicans, who have stood by the party since it was organized, shook their heads and prophesicil danger. And when election day came, it was plain to be seen that they had reason for fear. As good party men as we have in town, were seen to walk quietly up to the polls, and sarratch" the names of certain candidates. Why was this the case? Can an man say aught against his Republi canism? Has he not been a wheelhorse in the organization ever since the party was formed? Is not his record as an honest, incorruptible man, above suspicion? That he has sometimes erred no one disputes, but "let him who is without sin cast the first stone." reflection on such matters. We can response from a large insjority of the see now that we were living too fast -that we were having too many inlulgences-that money had lost its value with us-that we were looking to but one side of life, and that the giddy, foolish side, glittering with tinsel and rolicking in counterfeits. It has been a feverish, foolish and unhappy life that a great many people have been living, a life unworthy of men and women capable of understanding life's more substantial duties, and able to live to a higher end than that pursued by the Billiant butterfly that floats a day on the air and then passes away. If the pauic invites serious thought on these subjects, and a determination to turn over a new leaf by those who have been carried away by the late prevailing follies, it will not have cost the country too much.

What we need is a return to the good old republican theory of living, as exemplified by our forefathers and the founders of the republic. Had their teachings prevailed we should never have heard the disgraceful sal ary grab justified on the ground of the expense of living. .
