The fact that the house was fired at three different times and in eight different places in closets, in baskets of clothes and on beds, show conclusively that there was a desperate attempt made to burn the building; and it seems a miracl that the fire was evtinguished, as kerosene oil was at few days since to spend the summer with freely used and plastering cut away to enable the their son, but the old gentleman sarvived of y fire to make better headway. The only explanation is that it was what is known as a "plank house with cross girts every few feet, completely stopping the fire from dropping down, and preventing any draft between the plaster walls and the outside boarding. The house was set on fire some six o eight months since, and at that time was occupied by the same person; damages were then paid him or household furniture destroyed.

We saw more happy faces who reported their Lodges in a flourishing over that initiatory movement of theirs, in the cheap ribbon line, than we have seen, even over the success of the recent temperance movement. And, door reader, if you had been in POWE 's Store, on Decoration Day, and witnessed the eager countenances hovering over their beautiful assortment of fancy articles, you would have rejoiced in your heart that the pretty town and country girls could satisfy their souls' desires at such reascuable rates. We were in there on that busy occasion, in a most dejected frame of mind, for a single pair of stockings, -an article forever giving out in our household administration. The meek sppeal of the "gude man" for a "pair of legs," was still lingering reprovingly in our ears. He had not past asking for whole stockings, according to his most recent and emphatic statement, and so we stood there in the crowd, and among the overhauled ribbons, waiting with hose bexes.
