DOWN HILL Not long since I had occasion to visit one of our Courts, and while conversing with a legal friend I almost too well, or I should say, Anderson was in prison. I hastened heard the name of John Anderson "There is a hard case!" remarked I looked upon the man in the prioner's dock. He was standing up, and plead guilty to the crime theft. He was a tall man, but bent and infirm, though not old. His garb was torn, sparse and filthy; his face all bloated and bloodshot; his hair matted with dirt; and his bowed form quivering with delirium. Certainly I never saw a more pitiable object, Sprely that man was born a villain. I moved my place to obtain a fairer view of his face. He saw my movement and turned his head. He gazed upon me a single instant, and then a distant church-yard. I asked hill had been finally reached. covering his face with his hands, he sank powerless into his seat.

The foot in this form is seldom seen except in those who do not wear shoes or boots, or in those who exercise their judgment in the selection.

Many nations have found it con venient to go without any covering or protection for the feet, but others. lized peoples of the globe have long since lost sight of comfort and protection, and now have cases made for the feet which follow some strict rale of an absurd fashion. A good foot-covering should be made on the model of the foot-a should be of soft leather, so that every movement of the foot may take place in its natural sequence and without impediment; and, lastly, the boot is better buttoned or laced. These requirements are now entirely set at naught by fashion. The boot—especially a lady's—is made as narrow as possible, and the sole of the thinnest leather. The heel is made, in many instances, four inches deep and tipped with brass. Naturally, by such a practice, the toes rethe joints become distorted and the skin hardened by corns; the arch of the foot is destroyed by bringing the heel into the middle of the instep; the muscles at the back of the thighs Into the question so abundantly discussed of late in the public prints deformity, and a danger is incurred of tripping over any insignificant object, besides giving to the wearer a
