CLIPPING HORSES.—This is the seaon when many of the trotting and private driving horses of our citizens are relieved of their heavy coats of hair. There was a time when a great deal of opposition was made against this custom. A horseman says: "The arguments were that nature had provided warm and heavy coats for animals for their comfort and protection, and that it was gainst nature's laws to remove such protec tion. Gradually, however, this feeling is dying out. Those in favor of clipping horses admit that it is against nature's laws to remove the that it is against hature & laws to remove the hair, but if horses are to be driven at as high a rate of speed as they are, then it is necessary welcome visi ants in time of distress, and hop-Enther let the hair remain on and go slow, or take it off and go fast.
