My return to the par, as you know, is in accordance with a long-settled purpose. And set I am not uncorscious of the fact that in so doing I am severing personal and official relations of the most agreeable character. To my brother judges I am indebted for many of the piessantest and most profitable experiences of my social and professional life. With them for demned as hopélessly idle, we would offer em ployment, and, being a gentleman of leisure, my social and profess nai lite. With them inally and as a body, and from first to last, dividually and as a body, and from first to last, my personal intercourse has been unexceptionably cordial and my official relations distinguished throughout on their part by temperate forbearance and considerate respect. No differences of opinion, however great or tenaciously held or vigorously pressed in the discharge of duties at once varied, complicated and burdensome, have been permitted to interrupt for a single nument the free exchange of the warm. our exquisite structure, and talk with majestic eloquence upon the larger rewards due to "brain labor," until we had very accurately studied up the question as to how much more of actual brain labor goes into the sum of single mument the free exchange of the warm est sentiments of friendship. And I esteem it a privilege to have an opportunity to, say that to these associations and relations, I giarly acartizan. Don't we know dozens of these profesrequire less mental labor, and discretionary skill knowledge myself kreatly inderted, not only because they afforded me opportunities for correcting opinion and securing valuable as-sistance, but also for the reason that they have uruished me constant exhibitions of de duty and to truth which have strengthen d ppreciation of the value of an ho
